Because it normally takes years for national park proposals to work their way through Congress, and because the commercial interests are expected to lobby heavily against large-scale protection plans, the conservation groups say that Congress must begin work on the proposals as soon as the next Congress convenes in January.

The groups leading the drive to establish the parks are the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, the National Auduhon Society and Priends of the Earth. Each has declared Alaskan conservation to be a top priority issue.

The activities of Park Tong Sun, a South Korean businessman, have been under investigation by the Justice Department at the request of the State Department, according to Government sources. The inquiry followed testimony before a Senate subcommittee that the Gulf Oil Corporation paid $4 million in covert political contributions to South Korean officials from 1966 to 1970. Mr. Park's family operates a Gulf Oil refinery in South Korea. [Page 1, Col. 1.1

Human Rights Group Reports Repression in South America

South American military leaders have succeeded in crippling leftist extremism, but in the process many have condoned murder, torture, secret arrest and other abuses of human rights, Such methods, not new in Latin America, are being practiced in some countries now to an extent seldom seen before.

Repression designed to eliminate guer-rillas has been turned against politicians, intellectuals, churchmen, journalists, stu-dents and foreigners who attract suspi-cion. The degree varies from country in country, but police sources, diplomats, international organizations and victims all say that basic rights are regularly violated by the police and the military in the six southernmost countries-Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Brazil, Paraguay and Bolivia.

Amnesty International, the independent London-based organization that monitors human rights, in its annual report pubwere 30,000 political prisoners in Chile, Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil alone. Other sources say the total may be lower, though still considerable.

"Throughout 1975-76 there has been a slight but unmistakable deterioration in the overall human rights situation in the Americas, particularly in the southern cone," the Amnesty International report

Leaders in all six countries decy that they disregard human rights. Military spokesmen frequently insist, however, that barsh methods are essential because guerrillas have organized with foreign support and can cross borders at will.
A general in Argentina asserted, "We are fighting a dirty war, and the enemy is using every nonconventional means it can, requiring a response in kind."

"I was lucky," said Nelda, a 28-year-old psychology student who fled from Chile and was hiding in Buenos Aires. "I just but most are concerned with local issues got away with the usual things, like being and are involved in common crime. The chained naked to a metal bed frame for significant guerrilla action has been in electric sbocks to the vagina and breasts, being tied by the ankles and dunked in filthy water until I choked and being beaten. Many of my friends died or just Chile's three-year-old military regime has been criticized the most. A variety of sources say security officers in Argentina have been just as brutal as the Chileans, although "right-wing terrorist groups" are also blamed.

High Death Tolis Reported

Roman Catholic Church sources say that about 1,000 people have been tor-tured to death in Chile since the 1973 military coup against President Salvador Allende Gosseos, a Marxist. It is estimated that in Argentina well over 1,000 sus-be traced to their Government. Although leaders called moderate, including Gen.

Jorge R. Videla, the President, are described as being committed to protecting buman rights, they apparently have not been able to control unofficial repression by security agents.

In Unuguay 12 to 25 people are estimated to have been tortured to death since 1972, when the Tupamaro urban guerrilias began to decline. One out of 500 of Uruguay's three million people is said to be either a political prisoner or a refugee.

Cooperation Against Fugitives Torture in Brazil appears to be less systematic, although death squads, which have existed for a decade, still kill suspected common criminals. International organizations have accused both Paraguy and Bolivia of frequeot illegal arrests and detention and, in several cases, of apparent deaths by

All six countries cooperate to prevent uspected extremists from seeking haven in neighboring countries. Each has been known to send agents abroad, sometimes to the United States and Europe.

Even io countries where left-wing vio-lence was curbed years ago, officers maintain that they cannot relax. "As long as there is subversion in the Americas, it can be here." Gen. Hugo Linares Brum, Uruguayan Minister of the Interior, said n a recent interview. The all-out approach seems to be working. After using physical and psychologi-cal torture on prisoners to get information. Argentine security men hunted down the five principal leaders of the Marxist People's Revolutionary Army, among them Roberto Santucho, its founder and the mastermind of a junta linking the rem-nants of guerrilla groups in Argentina, Chile, Uruguay and Bolivia.

Scattered guerrilla groups operate in number of Latin American countries, the six southernmost countries.

Some Worse Than Others

A North American expert on Latin American security operations summed up the situation this way: "There is basically no difference in policy among the six. It is just that some are worse than others because they feel more threatened. This is not new—the torture and the arbitrary arrests—but it bas definitely gotteo worse in the receot past.

He said that abuses frequently were at the lowest level, often without the knowledge or consent of superior officers. But, he added, "in most cases they know what's going on-they have to."

Argentina's crackdown began only recently, creating a particular problem for refugees, After the military takeovers in Chile and Uruguay in 1973, thousands pected leftists have been killed in the refugees, After the military takeovers in last year alooe. The military took power in March, ousting Isabel Martinez de of left-leaning professionals, studeots and Perón, who had succeeded her busband workers streamed over the Andes and workers streamed over the Andes and in the presidency.

U.S. Envoys at U.N. Ponder Setback on Transkei Vote

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Oct. 30-Diplomats bere are trying to figure out how the United States ended up in complete isolation the other day, abstaining on a resolution that condemned as a sham the independence granted by South Africa to the Transkei.

"We were mousetrapped," protested an American representative after the vote in the General Assembly on Tuesday oight, which found the United States separated from its closest allies who belped put through the Transkei resolution by a vote of 134 to 0.

Clearly perturbed about the outcome, the Americans—and West Europeans and some leading Africans—insist that a well-motivated plan to have the resolution adopted without a formal vote had been upset by a few representatives wishing to provoke a confrontation and to isolate the United States.

The issue of the Transkei was raised bere as expected almost immediately after the new black state was proclaimed independent. The obvious aim was to have the Assembly denounce its establishment as being a product of South Afri-ca's policy of apartheid—the separation of ethnic groups.

Among the first victims were Zelmar Michelini and Héctor Gutiérrez Ruiz, both prominent Uruguayan politicians who had fled to Argentina, where they were avoid-ing politics and making new lives. They were found dead in a car with a young Linguayan couple, Guillermo Whitelaw and Rosario Barredo, both known as former Tupamaro guerrillas. According to security sources, police and military intelligence units, apparently acting without top-level orders, kidnapped them in separate incidents. The police were called but did not respond.

of anyone remotely connected with the clandestine operation. Some people point with admiration to Paraguay, where President Alfredn Stroessner dealt with opponents soon after he seized power in 1954 and then built up such a strong network of secret policemen that no attempt at guerrilla activity has survived its initial stages.

DEVALUATION ADDING TO MEXICO'S UNREST

Uncertainty Over Echevarria, and Economic Tension, Deeper Almost-Hysterical Mood

By ALAN RIDING

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 30—The latest sharp devaluation of Mexico's long-stable currency has brought new uncertainties to a country that is already suffering a serious crisis of confidence just one month before the inauguration of a new administration.

On ooe hand, acute political tensions are being fed by mounting evidence that President Luis Echeverria hopes to retain power and influence in the country after he leaves office Dec. I.

On the other, economic unrest is being aggravated hy the refusal of President-elect Jose Lopez Portillo to disclose his own plans for the future or at least to intervene publicly with an appeal for confidence and tranquility.

The new 24 percent devaluation of the Mexican peso Wednesday was thus provoked by worried Mexicans moving their mooey out of the country. But the measure has merely served to deepen the almost-hysterical mood of Mexico's conservative upper and middle classes.

Plague of Wild Rumors

Plague of Wild Rumors

A plague of wild rumors that has hit all levels of society in recent weeks has gathered oew force and, with no reliable informatioo available in the country's Government dominated newspapers, nerves have been placed further on edge. Government officials say that the rumors form part of a right-wing campaign to damage the reputation of the outgoing administration and to force Mr. Lopez Portillo to adopt more conservative policies after he takes office.

But while some of these rumors, such as an imminent coup, seem absurd, and others, such as a Government plan to as an immineot coup, seem absurd, and others, such as a Government plan to freeze personal bank accounts, have been specifically denied, the atmosphere of uncertainty is such that many Mexicans have been willing to believe them.

Political tensions traditionally rise in Mexico during the period of transition between administrations as politicaos, civil servaots and interest groups struggle to secure positions of influence in the next government.

Stroogest 'Lame-Duck' President

But experienced political observers believe that the situation this year has been made unusually difficult by Mr. Echeverria's emergence as the strongest "lameduck" Mexican President in recent memory, surrounding his hand-picked successor with his own close aldes and taking decisions that will affect the next administration.

sioos that will affect the next administra-tion.

Anxious to avoid ao opeo clash with Mr. Echeverria, Mr. Lopez Portillo, a stroog-minded 56-year-old former Fl-nance Minister, had carefully steered clear of any criticism of the outolog Gov-ernment and has so far given only the vaguest hiots as to the likely policies of his cabinet.

The question uppermost in the minds of Mexican politicians and businessmen, as well as of foreign diplomats, is therefore: Will the Lopez Portillo government be subject to the influence of Mr. Ech-evertia or will the new president be ceu, to clash with his predecessor in order to impose his authority? Unable to seek re-election, Mr. Echeverria is now campaigning to succeed Kurt Waldheim of Austria as the oext United Nations Secretary General, a bid that has the clear support of Mr. Lopez Portillo.

Cootrols Huge Press Empire

But should this effort fail, Mr. Ech. ria will leave office with exceptional do-mestic political power not only because his closest supporters will occupy the top congressional and ruling party leadership posts, but also because he controls a huge press empire comprising 39 newspapers throughout Mexico.

During a valedictory tour of the country, for example, Mr. Echeverria has been making highly provocative attacks on conservative business and farming groups conservative business and farming groups with the verve of a president who had just taken office. "Rather than trying to unite the cauntry for Lopez Portillo, has just polarizing the situation even more," one Mexico City Iswyer complained.

To the conservative industrial city of Monterrey, Mr. Echeverria charged businessmen with exercising economic power "egotistically," and said they were bad Christians "because they beat their chests, which is easy, but do nothing to promote economic and social developpromote economic and social develop-

Effective Devaluation 50 Percent

According to banking sources here, this angry exchange with the so-called Monterrey Industrial Group provoked the latest run on the peso and the new slump in its parity with the dollar, resulting in an effective devaluation of over 50 percent since the peso was first floated

"People here are in a great state of tension woodering what Echeverria will do next," a well-placed source in Monter-rey said. "His attack here was really gratuitous, but on the other hand people know he's leaving and are just gritting their teeth until Dec. 1." Analysts noted, however, that the new President will need both firm popular support and political strength in order to carry out the strict economic austerity program that he has indicated privately will be necessary during the next two

"My Government is one of transition," because it prepared the way for the con-solidation of the many social conquests that it mitiated, Mr. Echverria said is: a recent interview published here. Soares Appeals for Socialist Unity

LISBON, Oct. 30---Portugal's Socialist market economy.

Prime Minister urgently appealed today He emphasize for party unity and support for his Government's program to restore economic and social stability. Prime Minister Mario Soares warned that there was a campaign to split the Socialist Party and thereby undermine the country's first constitutional Government, composed of Socialists and inflien

Addressing the opening of the Socialist Party's second national congress, Mr.
Soares established the political guidelines for his party and Government, which he predicted would govern for four years, until the next legislative elections.

"Portugal is not ready for Socialism now," the Socialist leader said. But he stressed that a form of "advanced democracy" could he established here without destroying the basic mechanisms of a infrance.

He emphasized that the party's aim was still Socialism, but with the agreement of the Portuguese people and not by violence or anti-democratic methods. The party would carry out its program

"by phases," he said. Mr. Soares; talls for unity and realism were applauted enthusiastically by more than 1,000 Socialist delegates at Lisbon's Sports Pavillon. It was clear that whatever disputes may surface during the threeday congress the majority would support the party leader.

The presence of 55 foreign delegations also provided Mr. Soares with important backing. Most of Western Europe's Socialist leaders were present Brupo Kreisky, Chancellor of Alistria, Willy Brandt of West Germany, Olof Palme of Sweden and Francois Mitter and of

Is he a genius?

A lot of worldly women swear to it.

What will he do for me?

Make you happier you're you.

How?

Find out tomorrow when you meet Pablo

There's something slightly mysterious (and mystical) about this man. Oh, not who he is or where he comes from. Everyone knows that Pablo, the pet of the Beautiful People, is the world's most renowned make-up artist. And if you're a connoisseur of cosmetics, you also know that the man who'll do your beauty chart is Italian, that he went straight from school to the Elizabeth Arden Salon in Rome, and that Pablo's been Elizabeth Arden's pride and joy ever since.

The mystery is this. How can one once-over with those penetrating eyes tell him so much about you? Which features you should play up, and how. What shades (from Elizabeth Arden's Great Color Collections) will highlight, and which will tone down, your own skin color.

Here, to give you an idea of the personality you'll meet tomorrow, are some of the things Pablo said when he met us the other day:

- ✓ I love to be an interpretor of faces.
- ✓ Flawless beauty is not desirable.
- No one make-up look is for everybody.

 Don't be anyone's copy.
- ✓ Don't let your make-up art show. Simplicity takes a life-time to learn.

- ✓ Don't panic about age. Gray hair is beautiful.
- Busy American women need practical beauty routines.
- There is no one fashion color in make-up. That's why our Great Colors go from pink to mauve to warm brown.
- Self-acceptance is your best beauty aid.
- ✓ I want to meet women who really need me. Quiet ones who'll take my advice seriously.

Now, unless you're a flighty, flawless beauty, you're invited to have a personal (and complimentary) consultation with Pablo in our Elizabeth Arden boutique tomorrow through Friday. From 12:30 till 3:30 each day.

He'll do an individual chart for you to keep, with everything from skin care routines to Great Color make-up suggestions.

You'll take your chart to an Elizabeth Arden beauty expert who'll apply your make-up for you. And you'll go out smiling, which is the way we like to see an Altman's customer look.

P.S. What's mystical? If you believe in the stars, this is. Pablo's horoscope is exactly the same as Rembrandt's.

move supported among the nationalists. However, in background talks with American reporters, the sources raised a possibility of a British Commonwealth peacekeeping force to play a role in the transitional phase.

The idea of a Commonwealth force as an arbitor of the transfer of power from Rhodeaia's 270,000 whites to its 6.2 million blacks was raised at a meeting of Commonwealth heads of government in Ottawa in 1973, a fact that the British sources noted today.

They said the idea might have some value if black and white countries of the Commonwealth agreed on the formation of a joint force.

The sources listed Australia, Canada. New Zealand, Ghana and Nigeria as among the couotries that could contribute to such a force. They noted the presence among observers at the conference of the Assistant Secretary General of the Com-monwealth. Emeka Anzaoka of Nigeria, who has met several times with Mr. Ricb-

The British emphasized that the idea of a peacekeeping force remained only an idea, without the active support of any of the parties. Mr. Smith, emerging from a half-hour talk with Mr. Richard

"I've got a feeling that the next week or so we may be sitting twiddlog our thumbs." he said. "If that is so I'll probably go back to Rhodesia, even if only for a few days."

British Feel Encouraged

After the two initial sessions in the council chamber at the Palais des Nations, the British view is that the talks have begun with much less difficulty than expected. Officials say they have been encouraged by what they described as the surprisingly moderate mood at the talks, and by the ease with which delegates agreed on poteotially difficult procedural points.

As yet, there is no inclication to forecast agreement at the conference, the seventh major diplomatic attempt to resolve the Rhodesian dispute. But the British believe that the parties are ready to negotiate seriously, and that there is ntore flexibility in their positions than their public procouncements have sug-

Mr. Smith reiterated today his insist-ence that the conference endorse the kissinger proposals, which provide for a strong white role in an interim government that would pave the way for majority rule within two years. The nationalists have rejected them out of hand, saying that the conference will have to settle all details of an interim regime, including the role to be played by whites. Mr. Kissinger has said this week that he believed all parties to the conference he believed all parties to the conference were telling the truth, implying that his arrangements with Mr. Smith and the black presidents who ambiguous. Mr. Smith, who rejects this, said today that Mr. Schaufele's arrival should help clarify the issue. "I believe that is why he is coming," he said.

The British view is that the dispute over the Kissinger proposals is irrelevant, and that Mr. Smith will have to yield on some points if there is to be a settle.

on some points if there is to be a settle-ment. The view in London is that the Rhodesian leader knows he cannot continue his resistance to black guerilla forces without unacceptably high blood-shed among his white constituents, and will threfore work for a settlement as long as any reasonably acceptable deal can be worked out.

while pressing Mr. Smith to yield on the Kissinger proposals, Britain will seek to convince the four nationalist groups that London will not assume direct responsibilities in the interim period. A more assertive role by Britain has been a major objective of Joshua Nkomo and Robert Muzabe, two pivotal figures in Robert Mugabe, two pivotal figures in the nationalist movement.

One suggestion raised here is that Britain should appoint a governor general as the arbiter of the transfer process but London rejects this, saying it would involve responsibility without power.
To back a British presence with troops,

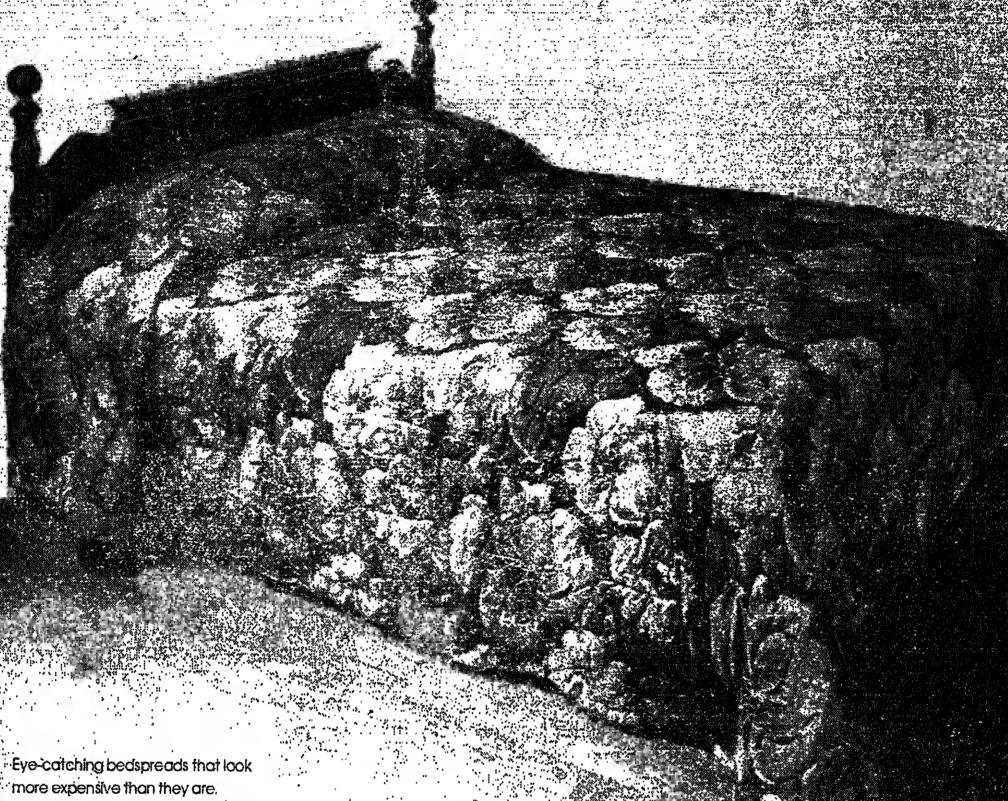

British officials believe, would risk fighting between them and black guerrilla forces dissasatisfied with the settlement terms, a development fatal to policy in

The British do not absolutely preclude a role, saying that the Cabinet would have to decide if it came to a choice between direct involvement and the col-lapse of the talks but for the moment toeir objective is to press the parties bere to agree on power in the transitional phase being vested in two indigenous bodies, a council of state and a council

The two-tier system was included in the Kissinger plan, but has been rejected by the nationalists who are suspicious that a fragmentation of power would be used by the whites to frustrate them. The British hope that they can be persuaded to accept the system if Mr. Smith will yield on the white powers that the Kissioger plan envisages in the two bodies.

for the separatist movement in Canada's dren

The Quebec Party, which has been promoting independence for Quebec since it was founded in 1968, is seen by political analysts as benefiting from a drop in popularity of the Liberal Party, which governs in Quebec as it does in Canada as a whole, The Liberal Party is committed to preserving national unity in a Federal system governed from Ottawa.

The province's Premier, Robert Bouras-sa, a 43-year-old French Canadian, won easily three years ago. But his position has been eroded by economic difficulties; labor unrest, particularly in the public services; widespread charges of corruption, and conflict over the language question with non-French minority groups.

Hostile Receptions

Typical of Mr. Bourassa's troubles was the stormy scene that greeted him in the town of Chicutisni Thursday night. He was almost knocked down by angry workers who had been on strike against and other minority groups that otherwise the Aluminum Company of Canada for are in favor of Quebec continuing as part the past five months and who feel they of Canada. have not had support from the provincial

Greenwich Neighborhood Recalls Slaying of High School Girl in '75

GREENWICH, Conn., Oct. 30—Young-sters and parents who live here on Walsh Lane try not to speak of last Oct.30, in By now, most of Greenwich has put spite of memories that have returned as the murder out of its mind. But that is vividly as the autumn foliage along the hard to do where it happened on Walsh secluded country road.

ered when a school friend walked across the Moxley property. Miss Moxley's body was less than 200 yards from her front door. She had been bludgeoned hy an unknown assailant with a golf club.

Now, a year later, three Greenwich detectives still assigned to the case continue the job of questioning some 500 people over and over again.

The identification of the goif club, broken in the assault and missing a handle, and the exact spot on the two-acre Moxley property where the killing took place are the only vital clues the police have hed to work with, and Detective Capt. Thomas Keegan steadfastly refuses to disclose any details for fear of "damaging the prosecution."

Speculation Is Denied

Police Chief Stephen Baran Jr. said: "We do not intend to utter the neme of anyone until we have someone we are confident is the right person. I think there was some irresponsible journalism going on at the time. Kids would mention a was some irresponsible journalism going an uodisclosed location, leaving the once-on at the time. Humphrey Resumes Politics With a Stay

By ROBERT E. TOMASSON

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey switched from hospital patient back to politician yesterday with a confident prediction of his election to a fifth term, but with uncertainty over his candidacy for Senate majority leader and a warning to the Democratic Party "to get out the voters" for Tuesday's election.

While he said he was "a limit of the doctors bere," he said.

"My health is about es good as I can hope for," he said, adding that he would be "a sort of outpatient" for the continuing treatment of the cancer that has shadowed him for eight years.

Turning to political questions, Mr. Humphrey said he did not believe that Jimmy Carter "has blown his lead" in the race for the Presidency.

"It's ridiculous to the ridiculous to the race for the Presidency."

While he said he was "a little tired," the characteristic ebullience of the 65-year old Democratic from Minnesota appeared intact as he turned his departure from the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Can-cer Center in New York City into a combination news conference and political rally, answering reporters' questions and shaking hands and patting children.

"God, I love New York" be said as he emerged in the mild autumn weather the hospital on York Avenue at 68th and dark blue tie with donkeys on it, Mr. Humphrey stood before a battery of microphones and cameras in the hospital's lobby jjammed with reporters, doctors and nurses and dozens of visitors and spoke of his illness and of politics.

"I feel fine and eternally grateful to the doctors here," he said.

"My health is about as grood as I can be a groo

"It's ridiculous to think that anyone is going into the election with a 20 or 30 percent lead" in the polls, he said.

Carter Victory Predicted

While predicting a Carter victory, the Senator said the "central issue is whether the Democratic organization, including labor, gets on those phones" to assure a sizable turnout.

"In 1968, I only needed one more vote in each voter district and I would have been President," the Minnesotan said

But the President is dedicated to a laissez-faire economic policy, the Senator added, while Mr. Carter has a greater understanding and compassion of the needs of Americans "and that's going to make the difference on Tuesday."

On his own candidacy for majority leader, Mr. Humphrey would say only that he would be discussing it with his Senate colleagues after the election "and we'll decide then."

After inching his way out of the lobby, pausing to chat and shake hands with whoever could get close to him, Mr. Humphrey was greeted outside by 50 or so passers by who shouted greetings and touched him.

The struggle for human rights has found, petitions and hoycotts, but one of constitutional arguments and legal theories.

It is a movement of the courtroom and the legislative chamber, aimed at reaching beyond patchwork protections against child abuse to establish clearcut constitutional rights for America's children.

But this movement is no less vigorous for its low profile. A spot check of 24 states by The New York Times disclosed that every one of their major cities had some legal group fighting for children's "Children's rights is a frontier area of legal thought," said J. Harvie Wilkinson, a professor of law at the University of Virginia, "and it will be a major concern of the United States Supreme Court in the next decade."

There are some state laws and regulations governing the mistreatment of children in detention centers and reform-dren, some going back for decades. But until the early 1970's, there was no organized movement to gain individual rights for children.

That children should be protected by the Bill of Rights is a new area of social, philosophical and legal thought. "We had always assumed that parents looked after children," said Robert E. Shepherd, pro-fessor of law at the University of Balti-

The leaders of the children's rights of persons, in religious, fraternal, social and labor organizations, make a distinc-tion between their goals and those of the advocates of racial or sexual equality. Their aim, they say, is not to let children determine their own destiny. Adults, they say, must ultimately be responsible for children.

What they hope to do is establish that a child has a right to a safe, stable home, to a reasonable education, to due process of law and to freedom from abuse and neglect. They bope, in other words, to prove that adults and institutions bave obligations to the young as well as pow-

John M. Rector, chief counsel of the Senate Juvenile Delinquency subcommit-tee in Washington, summarized the movement by saying. "We want to stop adults from being able to do anything to children and get away with it."

In the view of the movement's leaders, adults have historically been able to get away with an awesome list of injustices against the young, Among those they cite Committing children to mental insti-love children in this country, "says Peter Sandman, who heads the Youth Law Center in San Francisco, a federally funded children's-rights law firm. "In fact, we treat kids as chattels and have done so for as long as there has been an America. Children are the last oppressed minority."

The drive to end that oppression has had some successes. For example, to encourage states to stop locking up juveniles for "children's crimes," the Federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act was passed in 274. Sponsored by Senator Birch Bayh, the act provides money for states that can find alternatives to locking up

The bill was introduced after the filing of a Federal suit in behalf of six boys aged 12 to 15 who alleged that they had been sexually abused, hurned and beaten while confined in to testimony at the Governor's corruption to urge him to vote for some race track trial here

State Senator Rosalie S. Abrams, who represents the Governor's old home dis-trict in northwest Baltimore, testified Wednesday in Federal District Court that Irvin Kovens, the friend, had asked her to vote to override the veto of a bill to allow the number of racing days at Mariboro race track to be increased from

The Government contends that Mr. Kovens, who was indicted with the Governor, held a secret interest in Marlboro, along with three of the four other co-defendants in the trial, and that Mr. Mandel knew it. Mr. Kovens, a wealthy Baltimore businessman, was granted a separate trial, however, because of a eart condition.

Governor Mandel vetoed the racing days bill in May 1971, before his friends secretly bought the track. He is then alleged to have promoted the override of his own veto in January 1972 to benefit these friends.

Mr. Thomas also testified that Senator. Roy N. Staten, the majority whip and Mr. Mandel's closest ally in the Senate, announced before the override vote that the Governor would not mind if the veto were overridden. This account squares with earlier testi-

MONDALE'S COMMENTS CAMPAIGN ASSAYED

Characterization of the Republican Record Is Sometimes Found Less Than Accurate

> By JOHN M. CREWDSON ecial to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Oct. 30-"As we meet." Senator Walter F. Moodale told a gathering of Hispanic Americans here last night, "this nation has the highest unemployment since the Great Depression.".

The line was dramatic as it had been starlier in the evening when the Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee delivered it before a rally of labor union members. But like some of Mr. Mondale's other characterizations of the Republican record in receot days, it was less than accurate.

In the current recession, the nation has indeed experienced the worst unemployment since the early 1940's. But the peak rate of 8.9 percent was reached in May 1975, and it has since declined to 7.8

Asked about the discrepancy, an aide to the Minnesota Senator replied, "You're being literal." Another suggested that the candidate ought to be allowed some "political license.'

"He knows what he's trying to say," the first aide added.

But in a campaign in which gaffes by President Ford and Senator Robert J. Dole, his Republican running mate, are continually being underscored by the Democrats, such missteps by Mr. Mondale raise some questions about the degree of accuracy that is possible in a heated

Some Possible Explanations

In Mr. Mondale's case, the explanation may lie in the fatigue that besets any national candidate in the closing days of a campaign, the pressure the Democratic Party is feeling as its margin over Mr. Ford dwindles or simply the difficulty of discussing complex issues on the Earlier this week, for example, the Senator waded through several rallies a day in Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Jerand New Jersey, hammering away at what the Republican Administrations of Presidents Nixon and Ford allegedly did to the economy.

"They've tripled inflation and they've tripled unemployment these eight years."

Mr. Mondale said agaid again, "and that's anough to rip them out of efficien." that's enough to run them out of office."

But, according to figures produced by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, whose Impartiality Mr. Mondale has acknowledged, usern laborant is not allightly more than double what it was when Mr. Nixon took office in 1969 and the prices of consumer goods have not quite doubled since then.

One Mondale staff member, conceding that "you do have to draw some distinctions between the press releases we put out and what we say on the stump," explained that the Senator had meant to compare the average inflation under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson with the average under Mr. Nixon and Mr. Ford.

"Those are the numbers he's attempting to convey," another aide agreed. "Some-times the qualifier doesn't come through

Contentions Not Supported

The figures do not bear out, ho Mr. Mondale's contention that under the Kennedy and Johnsoo Administrations unemployment was less each year than the year before. Nor does another of the Senator's favorite assertions, that in that period "we had only 2 percent inflation every year," reflect that prices increased by more than 4 perceot in Mr. Johnsoo's last year in office.

Before elderly audiences, Mr. Mondale has said that Medicare, as approved in 1965, was intended to keep to "zero" the medical costs of eligible patients, pointing out that after two Republican Administrations the average Medicare re-cipient now pays 60 percent of his own

But the Medicare program originally envisioned that patients would pay about a quarter of their own bills, and in 1968, the last year the Democrats occupied the White House, the average patient paid 53 percent of each bill, only 9 percent less than is now the case.

On Monay, the Senator told a New Jersey audience that he had eaten breakfast that morning with unemployed steelworkers in Pennsylvania whose "red-for this year's Christmas presents were rimmed eves" and worries about paying

But participants at the breakfast, which part of the human cost of unemployment. reporters were allowed to observe from beland a rope, were rough and angry-sounding and there was not a teary eye visible in the room. Mr. Mondale said later that his description had been of a meeting with unemployed workers in Los Angeles early last month.

Asked at an airport news conference in Akron, Ohio, on Wednesday about charges that Mr. Ford had acted at the White House's behest in helping to halt a 1972 Congressional investigation of Watergate, Mr. Mondale, a lawyer who served as Attorney General of Minnesota, replied that he saw no reason "why we just don't look at" tape recordings of Mr. Nixon's White House conversations that might shed some light on the dispute.

But the Nixon recordings cao be obtained by the Watergate special prosecutor only with the consent of Mr. Nixon's lawyers or through civil litigation.

In MilWaukee yesterday, Mr. Mondale accused Mr. Ford of not having called for a "truly independent" special prosecutor to investigate future charges of highlevel wrongdoing in the executive branch, But the President and the Justice Department have for months backed a proposal that would establish an independent prosecutor on a permanent basis. The proposal was killed by the Democraticcontrolled Congress before it adjourned three weeks ago, however.

BUCKLEY CAMPAIGNS IN ROCKLAND COUNTY

Seeks to Cement Presumed Lead in the Republican Stronghold That He Carried 6 Years Ago

By GLENN FOWLER

Special to the New York Times

NYACK, N.Y., Oct. 30—Senator James

L. Buckley, seeking to cement his presumed lead in a Republican stronghold, toured Rockland County in a motorcade today.

Six years ago, with only the Conservative Party endorsement in a three-way, race, he carried this suburban-rural county by a greater plurality that he achieved statewide in his victorious campaign for the Senate.

At Republican and Conservative rallies in Orangeburg, New City and Nanuet today, Mr. Buckley continued his attacks on his Democratic-Liberal opponent. Daniel P. Moyniban, as a potential profligate spender of public money. He defended to own record on defense spending, however, saying he favored development of the B-1 bomber to replace the "obsolete". 34-52 as the mainstay of the United States wir Force.

He couched his advocacy of the B-1 terms of ecnnomic help for New York

Senator James L. Buckley signing autographs on Lexington Avenue.

State, noting that after California, New York holds more defense contracts than any other state. Development of the B-1, he said, could mean $1 billion in subcontracting work for Long Island defense concerns and other contracts on electronic equipment.

No Entreaties for Votes

Earlier in the day, Senator Buckley, appn a walking tour in Manhattan's York-pille section, received cordial handshakes from passers-by, all of whom he greeted with his engaging smile, but without the traditional entreaty of policital candidates to "vote for me on Tuesday" or "I need your help to win on Election Day."

Asked why he has customarily declined during a closely fought campaign to ask people directly for their vote, Mr. Buckley thought for a moment and said:

HAYAKAWA IS GIVING TUNNEY TOUGH RACE

Scholar, 70, Regarded as Unlikely Opponent of Senator, Trails by Only 2 Points in Coast Poll

> By WALLACE TURNER Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 30—By standards of past elections, Dr. S. I. Hayakawa has made more than enough mistakes to spoil his chances as the Republican nominee to defeat Democratic Senator John V. Tunney's bid for a secood term. But according to polls and observers, the two men are locked in a close contest.

The California Poll reported Taursday that, as or early this week, Senator Tunney led Dr. Hayakawa, 45 to 43 percent. with 12 percent undecided.

ney led Dr. Hayakawa, 45 to 43 percent. with 12 percent undecided.

Dr. Hayakawa, a semanticist and scholar, at 70 years of age is an unlikely opponent fur the 42-year-old Democratic Senator. He is Japanese and a naturalized citizen. Dr. Hayakawa's general election campaign may cost as much as $1.2 million, paign may cost as much as 31.2 minion, finance reports indicate.

Probably the major problem for Mr. Tunney is the division in the Democratic Party, where the inheriture of the anti-war, antiestablishment philosophies of the 1960's have turned against him and to Mr. Havden.

Mr. Hayden has refused to give his sup-port to Senatur Tunney, although he has said that he will vote fur him.

"I sure would hate to see Hayakawa get into the Senate because of Haydeo's campaign," Mr. Hayden said. "I feel it is important to campaign to expose Haya-kawa. But Tunney and I represent different wings, and those differences remain."

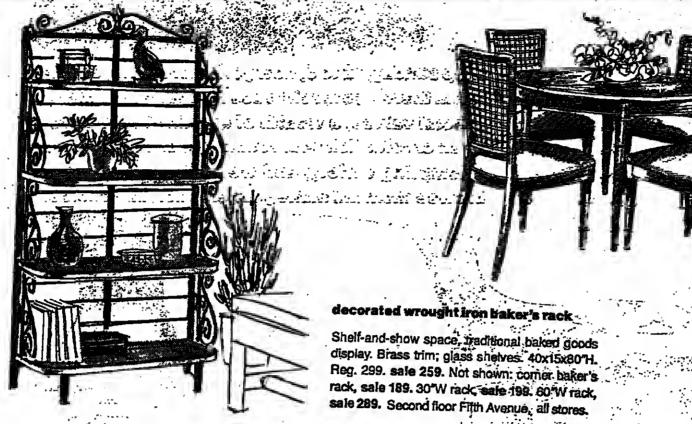

Given the dynamics of California politics, it has been difficult for some observers to understand how Dr. Hayakawa's candidacy could survive the unusual positions he has taken.

He has had two televised debates with Senator Tunney. The Senator, an experienced public performer, was more at ease, while Dr. Hayakawa seemed nervous and plainly was taken aback sometimes.

On a series of questions about American policy on Angola, Dr. Hayakawa found himself saying that be would encourage insurrection in countries whose govern-ments were thought to be unfriendly to the United States.

A black reporter asked the Japanese scholar if he would favor sending American troops to rescue an oppressed white minority in Africa. He replied that if a "blood-bath was going on, we'd have to do something."

After the debate, Dr. Hayakawa's political managers advised him to stop delivering off-the-cuff foreign policy post-

BLACKS ARE PLEASED BY ELECTION EFFORT

Leaders Believe They Have Raised Interest and Persuaded Many To Help Elect Carter

By PAUL DELANEY

CLEVELAND, Oct. 30—At a black hurch here last night, tha Rev. Jesse Jackson repeated one of his favorite

"Hands that picked cottoo in 1966 can" pick a President in 1976," the civil rights leader told a cheering crowd at Greater Abyssioia Beptist Church.

"In 1960, Joho F. Kennedy defeated."
Richard M. Nixon by 110,000 votes. In 1968, Nixoo beat Senator Hubert H. Humphrey by 530,000. Therefore, less than 700,000 votes elected two Presidents in eight years," Mr. Jacksoo said

Leaders of the natioo's largest minority group, coovioced on the eve of the Presidential election that the black vote could make the difference Tuesday, are coocluding the biggest voter registration and get-out-the-vote campaign since tha civil rights movement. Their aim is to reverse tha trend that has seen fewer blacks participating in the electoral process in recent years.

Financed by organized labor and the Democratic National Committee, these leaders have crisscrossed the country, speaking at churches and uoioo halls, carrying the message to black audiences in an evangelical feshioo, urging their followers to fulfill a kind of destiny on Tuesday.

Dent in Apathy Seen

Fueled by comments that at times have been emotional and passiogate—allegations that blacks have suffered economically under Republican administrations and were the object of an obscene joke by former Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz—the effort appears to have at least dented the apathy. How that will translate into votes no one was willing did predict the turnout would be higher to predict specifically. But the leaders than expected.

In that case, the minority vote, believed safely in the Democratic fold as usual, might well be the deciding factor in such key cities as Cleveland, New York, Nawark, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago and Houston—and could be the difference between victory and defeat for the Democratic candidate, Jimmy Carter.

The lackluster tone of the campaign stepped-up activity, if not excitement, in in the early days has given way to black communities around the country. Evidence locludes dramatic increases invoter registration as reported by electricals, some of whom were fighting one another only a month ago, and the belief among leaders that blacks had little togain under President Ford but at least some bope under Mr. Carter.

"People are beginning to recognize the choice, either the Ford record or Carter promises," remarked New York State-Secutor Carl H. McCall, "Black people are getting the message that their vote may be decisive."

But major credit in whipping up enthusiasm as the campaign winds down a goes to a tour by some of the most wallknown blacks. They visited over a dozen of cities, chiding and cajoling blacks about their apathy.

Black Complainers Scored

"The black who refuses to vote Tuesday," will be the first to complain about conditions," Representative Barbara C. Jordao of Texas told an audience in Chicago last week.

Mr. Jackson, president of Operation People United to Save Humanity, termed that attitude "the logic of madness."

Under the names "Operation Big Vote" and "Wake Up, Black America," the voter registration campaign and the tour by the leaders, as well as local voter registration drives, were said by the leaders to have added a million new voters to the rolls, thereby reaching the goal they

Interviews with election officials and political leaders in several key cities found not only a major effort to register blacks but also to get them to vote. Plans for producing a big turnout range from the traditional methods, such as using sound trucks, telephoning voters and ringing doorbells, to new techniques such as using campers to offer baby-sitting service while taking parents to polling places.

The registration effort also saw new techniques employed. Los Angeles used "human billboards," young people stationed at freeway exits with signs urging motorists to register. The Carter campaign in Battimore set up what it called a "bounty system" whereby individuals and organizations were paid 50 cents for every validated registration card brought.

A Million New Votes Seen

This activity led some blacks to believe that a million new voters were ready to go to the polls. John Lewis, director of the Voter Education Project in Atlanta, said that half a million of the additional voters were in the South.

"We conducted drives in all 11 South-

"We conducted drives in all 11 Southern states and had results soch as 2,000 in Florence, S. C., and 500 in Anniston, Ala. In Texas alone we added 400,000," Mr. Lewis said.

"There was talk of apathy in the North, but I found a fantastic amount of interest in the election in the South and I expect a much higher turnout than predicted," he added.

As a result of the voter registration drives, Carl Butler, Democratic leader of the 56th Assembly District in Brooklyn, said that black registration increased in the borough by 100,000. Newark added 20,000; Baltimore, 44,000; Memphis, 21,000, and Houston, 40,000.

The tour by black leaders, partly non-partisan because some of the funds used were nonpartisan, began two weeks ago in Philadelphia and will conclude Monday night with a rally in Los Angeles where Mr. Carter is scheduled to speak. The tour was in New York City last Tuesday and Wednesday.

and Wednesday.

At times disorganized, the group was made up, at various points, of Mr. Jacksoo; Georgia State Representative Julian Bond; Coretta Scott King, widow of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.; Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., and black members of the House of Representatives. Their appeal was emotional end, with the exception of Mrs. King, more anti-Ford than pro-Carter.

The event was tonic for a politican and a welcome lift for Mr. Carter as he approached Tuesday's election with opinion polls showing President Ford drawing over President Ford had been reduced to closer in a race that many experts refuse wafer thinnesss.

Mr. Carter began his day with a rally at the Tulsa, Okia., airport, then came to New Orleans before campaigning in San Antonio and Dallas

Mr. Carter told an enthusiastic endience in Jackson Square here that "the truth isothat there's no tax cut under the Ford plan" put forward by the Republican canonate. "Instead, if you read the fine print you'll see there is a merely a tax shift" that would benefit the prosperous more than those with Inwer incomes, he said. "I think," Mr. Carter said, "the American people are tired of last-minute, election year provises. They have been discovered. "Instead, if you read the fine print tion year promises. They have been disappointed by too many politicans promising too much and doing too little. This overpromising and underperforming has been a major contributing factor to the distilusioning of our people with Government."

Mr. Carter injected a new element into the campaign that might hart him with environmentalists and some other voters in Northeastern states when he said it was wrong for Eastern Seaboard states to impose legal obstacles to offshore oil exploration and drilling off their coasts. In this oil-producing state with its tidelands and more distant offshore wells, Mr. Carter told the eudience that in New Jersey recently he had said in a radin interview that such Eastern states should start trying to find oil and help states like Louisiana and Texas" in meeting na-

Mr. Carter also spoke to the special interest of Oklahoma, an oil and gasproducing state.

He said that the country should "do whatever is necessary" to see that energy companies continue vigorously to explore for oil and gas, adding that prices to producers should be "fair." "It's unfortunate," he concluded, "I regret it, but under the circumstances, maybe it was inevitable."

He was remembering, oo doubt, the storms that had spasmodically mired his campaign in a succession of apologies, retractions, regrets and explanations — from his advocacy of "ethnic purity" in urhan oeighborhoods to his earthy discussion of sex and lust in an interview with those positions. He was surprised, he said, by the furor those incidents and others had stirred just as he was surprised by the "quick success of our primary campaign" and the "relative ease with which we woo the nomination."

But the higgest surprise of the campaign, he said, was the public's response to his religious views.

"I oever would have thought they would have been the cause of so much concern," the Snuthern Baptist said, shaking his head. "So many analyses, so many stories, so many questions, so many expressions of doubt and skepticism-and occasionally ridicule. It really amazed me, and sometimes it hurt a little."

But that lesson is not among those he likes to tell his andiences that he has learned from the mooths and miles that lay behind him in his pursuit of the White Hnuse—and, characteristically, as he dis-cussed his campaign in his office-like quarters aboard the plane, he turned to what he considered to be more pleasant recollections.

So. Mr. Carter proposed a general par-don for the draft resisters, "And I wasn't surprised at all by the flack I caught for it," he said.

Many of those who have watched Mr. Carter over the months have begun to detect signs that the campaign has taken some physical toll on him. Volunteers, Wary of Close Rolle back Plan Big Effort to Get Out the

NEW MONMOUTH, N.J. Oct. 30—By sult of these changes a be medification on Tuesday, hours before the polls close, the outcome of the Presidence of Jimmes of J dential election could be decided by a small group of volunteers working in this subjection community and foundated like it across the nation.

After militors of miles of campaigning ready the minority party of militions of dollars spent and militors of ranks of Democratis and independent of contrast and independ to the party that best does the job of getting out the vote.

Here in Middletown Township, where tract houses end shopping centers blanket land first claimed by settlers 300 years ago, where Washington's raging brigades fought the British 200 years ago, Democratic runners will fan out to different polling places around 3 P.M. and begin scrutinizing voter challenge lists.

They will note the names of Democrats who have not voted by that time and the information will be relayed to local party headquasters.

Then, by telephone and knocking on doors, other volunteers will extempt to roust out those at home or et work, urging them to vote and offering to provide transportation or babysitting services. If these overtunes fail, the caller then can resort to any argument necessary to persuade, cajole or shame his subject into voting in the remaining few hours.

The success or failure of these worker and their counterparts across the nation, may hold the key to the untcome of a Presidential cootest that has narrowed in its final days to what most polls call

Consequently, the pressure on both Democrats and Republicans to turn out support for their candidates has turned feverish after a long campaign marked by coolness and caution. Republicans are generally more confi-dent that their partisans will vote, though the party's numerical ranks nationally are

The Democrats, oo the other hand, have just coocluded a long-and expensive national drive to register voters, and party leaders are nervously hopeful that the investment will pay off in an election that could be as tight as the 1960 and 1968 races.

It is widely assumed that a low voter turnout across the nation on Tuesday will ourt Democratic chances. Conversely, a high turnout is viewed as trouble for the states, a harvest that shoul Republican ticket.

Projections by some analysts that po-litical alienation may mean that fewer than half the eligible voters will cast ballots have therefore pushed the Democratic Party into a sense of greater urgency about getting its supporters to the polls. The campaign by the Democratic National Committee to register new voters or reregister those whose cames had been ourged from the voting rolls, has proinced mixed results.

Democratic ticket. Organizing efforts among blacks bas reached a strong pitch in the last weeks of the campaign, and get-out-the-vote drives are concentrating on urban blacks in industrial states as a group upon which the balance of power might hinge in a cinse election.

Focus on 14 States

The Democratic registration drive has focused on 10 Northern industrial states and the swing Sunbelt states of Virginia, Florida, Texas and California. Voter discontent over the Watergate scandal and the resignation of President Nixon led to wide-scale purging of voter rolls in many states. In California, for example, 1.8 million voters have been taken off since the 1974 election. About 1.3 million voters were registered by the deadline this fall, but the oumber oow able to participate in Tuesday's election is half a million below the 1972 figure

There is evidence that the Republican Party has declined even further as a re-

2,025 Interviewed In Times-CBS Poll

The New York Times and CBS News survey is based oo telephone interviews conducted from Oct. 24 to Oct. 27 with 2,025 régistered voters across the continental United States.

The sample of telephone exchanges called was eelected by a computer from a complete list of exchanges in the country. The exchanges were chosen in such a way that each region of the country was represented in proportion to its number in the population.

The results have been weighted by selection probabilities related to bousehold size, and by race, sex, region, age and education. The weighting proce-dure is used as e safeguard against random variations for these fectore in the sample.

In theory, one cao say with 95 percent certainty thet the overall results io a sample of this size differ by no more than 2.5 percentage points in either direction from what would have been obtained by interviewing all Americans of voting age. For Demo-crats or independents alone, the theoretical error margin is about three percentage points. For Republicans, the error is about five percentage points.

When Adolph S.Ochs became publisher of The New York Times in 1896. he wrote what he called a "business announcement." It appeared on the Editorial Page over his signature, It read, in part:

"To undertake the management of The New York Times, with its great history for right-doing . . . is an extraordinary task. But if a sincere desire to conduct a highstandard newspaper, clean, dignified and trustworthy, requires honesty, watchfulness, earnestness, industry and practical knowledge applied with common sense, I entertain the hope that I can succeed in maintaining the high estimate that thoughtful, pure-minded people have ever had of The New York

"It will be my earnest aim that The New York Times give the news, all the news, in concise and attractive form, in language that is parliamentary in good society, and give it as early, if not earlier, than it can be learned through any other reliable medi-_um; to give the news impartially, without fear or favor, regardless of party, sect or interests involved; to make of the columns of The New York Times a forum for the consideration of all questions of public importance, and to that end to invite intelligent discussion from all shades of opinion."

The world has changed since 1896. The New York Times has changed with it. But the principles that guided The Times in those days still guide the day-to-day coverage you expect from

Oceanic and Rotterdam Require Hull Scrubbings 3 Times a Year

By WERNER BAMBERGER

Warm tropical waters may be a delight to cruise-ship passengers but to ship owners, having to meet rising fuel oil bills, they are a problem because in water underwater vegetation huilds up on hulls and slows liners.

As a result, the two largest year-round cruise ships in the New York port, Home Lines' Oceanic and Holland America's Rotterdam, are going to the cleaners in Nassau three times a year to have their hulls scrubbed.

A Florida-based company, Underwater Services Inc. of Miramar Park, near Miami performs the cleaning in two ways, hy using a brush boat, equipped with telescoping brush handles that reach all the way down to the keel, or by an underwater brush cart, steered by a scuba diver, that moves along the underside of the vessel like a golf cart. The brushes are made of nylon or soft stainless steel. The average treatment takes about two days and costs about $5,000. It clears away the "grass," marine vegetation and barnacles, a type of ship underwater intake valves.

The reason for cleaning the liners, it was explained, is strictly economic with fuel running close to $80 a ton. Years ago when fuel cost only $20 a ton, steamship companies cleaned hulls only once a year during the annual overhaul in drydocks.

After treatment, the clean hull permits the ship to make an additional knot, which on a weekly round trip from here to Nassau translates into 4.5

fewer hours of steaming. This in turn, for a vessel making between 18 and 20 knots, means a saving of $3,600 in hunkers per voyage, or full amortization of the cost of the

More Guerrillas Reported Killed In La Plata, Bringing Total to 20

LA PLATA, Argentina, Oct. 29 (Reuters) —Ten left-wing guerrillas died today in clashes with Argentine security forces, bringing to 20 the number killed in this provincial capital in the last 24 hours, the police said.

The guerrillas opened fire from two cars on a police station. In the chase that followed, security forces shot dead five guerrillas in one car. Four others five guerrillas in one car. Four others died when their vehicle crashed over a bridge and burst into flames, according to the police. The other guerrille was while resisting arrest, the police

MIKI EXPECTED TO STAY IN OFFICE UNTIL ELECTION

Special to The New York Time

TOKYO, Oct. 29-It appeared virtually certain here tonight that Prime Minister Takeo Miki would dissolve Parliament general elections for early December, probably Dec.5.

. That will give the 77.8 million voters in the Asieo nation that is most closely allied to the United States their first opportunity to pass judgment oo their politicians sioce the reveletions last wioter of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporatioo's $12.6 million in bribes and illegal fees

While elections for the 511 seats in the lower chamber, the House of Repre-sectatives, must be held by law by Dec. 10, the general timing and the ideotity of the ruling party's election leader were uncertain until today.

Then, continued factional squabbling within the Liberal - Democratic Party caused cancellation of a party conven-tion, that had been scheduled for this weekend in a bid by Mr. Miki's opponents to oust him from the party leadership.
Mr. Miki's supporters, who number barely one-third of the party's 256 lower house members, wanted to make the convention. only a pep-rally prelude to a geoeral electioo effort under Mr. Miki's leadership. Thus, cancellation of the meeting repre-President Daniel Oduber disclosed yessented yet another surprising success in a growing string of political victories f

Higher and Higher

In October 1972, the owners of the 102-story Empire State Building announced that they were exploring the possibility of adding 11 stories to the building, making it once again the world's tallest. Plans for the Sears Roebuck Tower in Chicago would soon make it the world's tallest building.

The idea, however, was quickly abandoned by Shreve Lamb & Harmon Associales, the original architects of the building, because of strong public protests,

"The public felt that additional stories would change the beautiful shape of the building." Harvey Clarkson, president of the coocern said the other day. "We also thought it would be too expensive. Those two things made us abandon the idea.
"We had just heard the announcement that the Sears Tower would be the tallest building." said Mr. Clarkson who has been with the company for five years. "We wanted to get the title back for New York City." tests.

P.S.C. Restudying Rule Allowing Utilities to Pass On Fuel-Cost Rise

By FRANCES CERRA

The chairman of the New York State Mr. Kahn said in an interview that he Public Service Commission; Alfred E. was "not indifferent to the fact that 22 Kahn, said last week that he was "taking percent of the costs of the utilities are another look" at the fuel-adjustment not scrutinized in the rate-making procrule, which allowed more than one-fifth ess." He said: "Now that fuel prices have settled of the costs of New York's electric utilities to escape scrutiny during rate cases down, it seems a good time to ask whether we can restore the pricing of ities to escape scrittiny during rate cases last year.

Under the policy, the utilities can automatically pass on to consumers any increase in the cost of fuel used to generate electricity. Although the clause has been in effect for many years, it became a source of major concern during the Arab oil embergo when costs of fuel rose rapidly. The utilities said that if they had been forced to go through a time-consuming formal rate case in order to recover the higher costs, they would have gone bankrupt.

Rate Increases Granted

Critics, however, argue that the clause allows the utilities to escape regulatory challenges to a substantial portion of their costs. During 1975, according to a Library of Congress study released last month, electric utilities nationally passed on $5.9 billion in higher rates by using the clause. The total increase in electric rates for that year was $9.2 billion, of which only $3.3 billion was approved by the formal rate-making process, according to the study, released by Senators Edmund S. Muskie, Democrat of Manne, In New York, however, rates did not go in 1974, meaning that if there had been no other changes, rates would have dropped slightly because the utilities had the definition of the study, released by Senators Edmund S. In 1975, however, the Public Service Commission granted rate increase to the electric utilities amounting to $233,583,000.

Carey Using Current Election Campaigns to Prepare for His Own

Governor Carey, who was having problems with both his party and the Legislature six months ago, has used the current election campaign to smooth ruffled feathers, at least among his fellow Democrats, and presumably to prepare the way for his compared to the compared to own re-election campaign two years from now. The Governor has been highly visible in bls campaigning for the national ticket here New York Political and io out-of-state appearances in Ohio and Pennsylvania. But he has also been actively campaigning for state legislative candidates from Staten Island to Niagara Falls, even to the point of being the priocipal attraction at fundraising events in private homes.

Mr. Carey has beaten the drums for Mr. Carey has beaten the trains for legislative candidates in Nassau County, Queens, Manhattan, Stateo Island, Westchester County, Syracuse, Buffalo and Niagara. He has been the host of two fund-raising breakfasts for the Democratic legislative campaign committee at the Weldorf Agreem Note. mittee at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. He has also eocouraged some of his own fund-raisers to belp the floancially strapped Senate candidate, Daniel P. Moynihan.

The Governor's standard speech at these affairs is highly partisan in con-trast to his politically ecumenical ap-proach during the state and city fiscal crisis earlier this year when he needed Republican help in the Legislature.

The Carey campaigning indicates that the Governor is popular enough that be can help local candidates, a conclusion that is supported by a New York Times survey that showed that he had emerged from the fiscal crisis with a positive image among state residents. The Governor apparently even has a

The Governor apparently even has a positive image with Assembly Speaker Stanley Steingut, a fellow Brooklyn Democrat but e longtime antagonist. Mr. Steingut has privately praised the Governor's campaigning to several

Despite the oew system of voter registration by mall and other techniques designed to make it easy for New Yorkers to register and vote, the oum-ber of eligibles, at 8.5 million, is 700,-000 less than in the last Presidential

Why? In a New York Times survey, only a small number of those who bad not registered said that the process was too difficult. About half those queried said they had not got around to it, while cearly half said in one form or another that they had turned off

Speaking of the Governor's fencemending, one problem that is not likely to go away easily is Patrick J. Cunning-bam, the self-suspended state chairman. With Justice Leonard Sandler of State Supreme Court signaling that Mr. Cunningham may be completely exonerated of various charges brought against him by the deposed special state prosecutor, Maurice H. Nadjari, politicians are oow speculating about Mr. Cunningham's political future.

Presumably, he would want to resume his state chairmanship, but top advisers of Governor Carey say things will never be the same in the ooce-bosom-buddy relationship between the Governor and Mr. Cumningham.

Governor and Mr. Cunningham.

There is considerable evidence of strain between the Governor and the state chairman over fund-raising and several patronage appointments eveo before the Nadjari indictments. And friends of the Governor report that Mr. Cunningham has been highly critical in private of what he considered was the Governor's basty detachment from the embattled state chairman.

"I don't see how the Governor can operate with him on e confidential operate with him on e confidential basis," said a close Carey associate.

Apparently, when Mr. Cunningham's legal battles are over, the political fights will start.

The Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, Mr. Moyninan, prides himself on his writing to the point where his aides have to clear the most routine press releases with him. But Mr. Moynihan went to an extreme recently when be not only starred in his own television commercials—normal enough for a candidate—but wrote them in Tony Schwartz's West Side studio just before they were taped. Mr. Moynihan is obviously one politician who cannot complain about ghost

Under the new Federal campaign fi-nance law barring individual contribu-tions of more than $1,000 to a cam-paign, candidates are increasingly turn-ing to fund-raising by mail. As they do, politicians, who in recent years have picked up some of the jargon of television commercials, now talk of "prospecting" and "mining."

Prospecting describes the use of hroad mailing lists in which the returns are likely to be only a small portion of those solicited for e contribution. Mining refers to the use of lists of previous contributors who at least opened their checkbook once and ap-parently are more likely to do it again.

The judge, Morris E. Lasker, issued a preliminary injunction last week in Federal District Court in Manhattan to prevent the cutoff of benefits for a variety of welfare recipients. The injunction applies to recipients who request havings to of a new statewide schedule of maximum.

welfare recipients. The injunction applies to recipients who request hearings to raise factual disputes about unilateral decisions by the State Department of Social Services regarding the application of changes in state welfare policies.

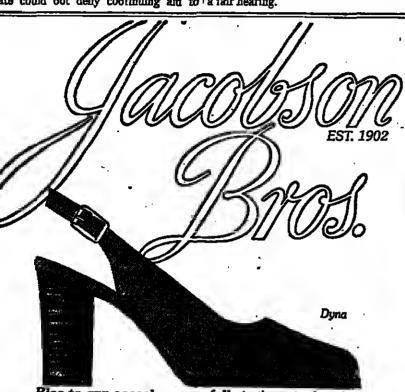

The case involves between 50 and 200 fair hearings because their shelter allowances that weot into effect in September 1975.

The judge said in his decision that "welfare recipients generally live oo the brutal edge of poverty—they require state assistance to meet the basic demands of subsistence to keep themselves and their children fed, clothed and housed."

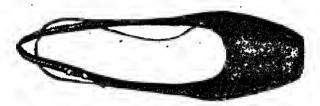

There is a substantial danger, he continued that some welfare recipients in the first case may lose their present housing if their aid is cut off before they receive a fair hearing.

A Federal judge has ruled that welfare recipients of aid to dependent children, home relief, Medicaid, veterans assistance and aid to the aged, blind or disabled who made "timely requests for a fair hearing decision on a proposed reduction, the welfare policies of New York State.

"In a certain sense, it may be my fault," said Paul O'Dwyer, the City Council President and chairman of the Charter Implementation Committee. "We have tried to work on the toughest ones first."

The purpose of the proposed Office of Budget Review is to give the City Coun-cil and the Board of Estimate some real control and review power over the budg-et process. The idea is to set up an independent, professional budget review that will function like a combination of the General Accounting Office and the Fi-nance committee of the House of Representatives and the Senate, with power to monitor agency performance. As it is, the Council merely rubber-stamps the

Mayor's budget proposals. 'Shouldn't Take Too Long'

"Setting up the Office of Budget Review involves getting about 10 Councilmen together with the eight members of the Board of Estimate," Mr. O'Dwyer "It doesn't need to go for approval from different areas nor does it involve all the levels of government."

Mr. O'Dwyer said that he had had his first meeting on the subject of the Office of Budget Review with the City Council leadership last week and that he would be meeting with the Board of Estimate about it this week. He said the next step was to have repgether, and he thinks that by mid-Novem-ber the project will be well under way. "It shouldn't take too long to put to-

With only a little over two months to and the Board of Estimate are to set up the duties and responsibilities of the office. The charter also says that the office's director should be a qualified professional chosen after a public hearing. It specifies that qualifications for the position and procedures for recruitment and screening of candidates be estab-lished. None of these recommendations has yet been considered by the Council or the Board of Estimate.

'Minor Players, Great Drama'

Mr. O'Dwyer said there had been puling between the Council and the Board of Estimate as to which group would control the Office of Budget Review. He himself thinks it should have been entirely a tool for the Council, since the Board of Estimate is not really part of the city's legislative branch, but is es-sentially a hybrid body.

one member of the City Council, when asked why it had not been more active in pursuing a change that would clearly give it more power, said: "The Council doesn't want power. The members see themselves as minor players in a great drama, and they just want to carry their greats and they just want to carry their greats and they just want to carry their spears and stay out of the way of the mportant actors."

what little budget power the Council has now, he got squashed. In 1974, Matthew J. Troy Jr. of Queens geared up the Countioning the Mayor's budget and a small amount of Cain. For his the Mayor had him removed

Lower East Side Churches Mobilize Against Vandalism and

By GEORGE DUGAN

Three weeks ago. Damascus Christian Church, at 289 East Fourth Street, was estroyed by fire.

Two months ago, Emmanuel Spanish Baptist Church, at 256 East Fourth Street, was desecrated. The organ was set on fire, windows broken, obscenities were spread on the walls and the washroom

And last week, the pastor of the Eglesia El Divino Maestro, at 250 East Third Street, lifted his telephone off the hook and heard an anonymous caller shout, "Your church will be oext."

All three churches are evangelical Prot stant, Hispanic-Pentecostal and, with others on the Lower East Side, recent victims of fire and vandalism.

There are several reasons for the fires, according to officials of Accion Civica Evangelica, the two-year-old civic and social-action arm of the city's evangelical churches. They include the following: ¶Religious buildings are per se more ulnerable than stores and businesses.

THispanic churches are most vulnerable because they are new to the neighbor-hood and oot fully accepted. The police are less responsive to com-plaints from oewly established churches and synagogues with unfamiliar names

This week, Accion Civica took a major step toward remedying the situation. Oo Wednesday night, a group of Hispanic clergymen met with officials of the city's Police Department at the Mar de Galilea Phristian Church, 166 Eldridge Street. Participants included the Rev. Raymond Rivera, the president of Accion Civica Evangelica; the Rev. Jose Caraballo, its executive director, Roland Cintron, staff

Mr. Casanova was sympathetic and pledged that the department would co-operate to its "fullest extent." He pointed out, however, that the police have no urisdiction over decelict buildings and that the department was undermanned. He also appealed to citizens in the area to report all crimes and to be prepared to serve as witnesses.

Mr. Rivera called upon resideots and churchgoers to become involved in community programs and to volunteer for police auxiliary units.

Oo Friday, Mayor Beame assured the leaders of Accioo Civica that the Police Department would intensify efforts to prevent vandalism of churches, particularly oo the Lower East Side.

In his statement, the Mayor said that he was "distressed" by the vandalism and that after conferring with Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd, "I have personally given Jose Caraballo, executive director of Accioo Civica Evangelica, assurance that the city will take every step occassary to stop these senseless

Mr. Rivera said police officers not indigenous to the community frequently found it difficult to relate to the oeigh-borhood and tended to brush off com-

He noted that damage to Damascus Christian Church was in excess of $30,000 and that Accion Civica had already started a fund-raising campaign to help re-build the edifice.

Drive Begun to Protect Alaskan Wilderness Not Affected by Pi

The whole country has something at stake in Alaska."

Until Alaska received statehood 1959, the territory was virtually all Federal Government land. That year, however, saw the beginning of a process of ever, saw the beginning of a process of carving up the state's 375 million acres that has not ended. The State of Alaska was allowed to select 103 million acres. In 1971, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act gave the Eskimos, Indians and Aleuts the right to select 42 million acres and $962 million. The act also authorized a temporary freeze on development in Federal lands pending the selection of 80 million acres to be considered for negional parks, or for other degrees.

In 1973, the Department of the Interior recommended that 83.3 million acres be permanently protected—32 million as national parks, 32 million more as national wildlife rafuges, just under 19 million as national forests and less than a million as "national wild and scenic

This was the proposal, more than doubling the national park system, to which President Ford referred recently in a speech at Yellowstone National Park

a speech at Yellowstone National Park and which many people assumed was a new initiative. In fact, the bill authorizing the new reserves has languished in Congress for three years.

The coalition of conservation groups, feeling that the 83-million-acre proposal is inadequate, drew up a rival bill that would protect 106 million acres. This bill, which has also been largely ignored by Congress, recognizes most of the same ecological zones as worthy of protection, but enlarges the boundaries of several that, the conservationists felt, had been gerrymandered.

For example, in the proposed Gates of multiple-use areas in which are permitted grazing, logging and mining as well as wildlife and recreation.

A Basic Disagreement

One of the key disagreements is over the form of protection to be accorded the Wrangell and Chugach Mountains. The Government's plan would put only the rugged and snow-covered mountain peaks in a national park while designating the wooded lowlands, where most of ing the wooded lowlands, where most of the wildlife is, as a national forest.

The conservationists want the entire area made a national park. That would make this region of 18 million acres by far the largest national park in the country. It would seven times the size of Yellowstone, now the higgest.

Another area of contention is the region north of the Brooks Range, which is the breeding ground of the Arctic caribou herd. Because this area was in a Government area known as Naval Petro-

Government area known as Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4 and not eligible for allocation, it was not included in any of

Recently, however, it was announced that this vast area would be turned over to the Bureau of Land Management for a to the Bureau of Land Management for a variety of commercial and other uses. As a result, the conservation groups say that they are drawing up a new bill that would extend protection to the breeding grounds (other parts of the caibou's range would be in the proposed Noatak and Kobuk Valley reserves).

This would raise the applicated area.

For example, in the proposed Gates of the Arctic National Park, which would include a substantial portion of the Brooks Range of mountains with its bears, wolves, moose and caribou, the Department of the Interior proposed 8.36 million acres.

The conservationists say that the proposed sand by the conservation groups to 120 million acres from 106 million acres. Still other bills are expected to be drawn up by Alaska's native peoples and by the state's Washington delegation. Whether any of these bills, or a compromise, can be hammered out and en-

Popular Fordham Teacher May Have to Leave if Not Granted Tenure

Among students he is probably the most popular teacher on campus, and among administrators he is considered one of the mnst effective, but unless he becomes the first person in the school's history to be granted tenure by the faculty senate, the Rev. Raymond A. Schroth will soon be forced tn leave Fordham University. A 42-year-old Jesuit and an associate professor in the communications de-part, Father Schroth was denied tenure last May by e departmental review committee. This decision would normally mean that he would have to leave the achool after the 1976-77 academic year, his seventh year at Fordham. But the university's president, the Rev. James C. Finlay, termed the decision "unjust" and over the summer took the unusual action of passing the case oo to the faculty senate with the recommendatino that it grant tenure to Father Schroth

"Dozens and dozens of kids have Told me what a fine teacher he is, and I've seen the way he works," Father Finlay said. "He has performed exceptionally well under the norms that the faculty established for granting tenure. I just don't think he was treated fairly or properly.

Majority Approval Needed

For tenure to be granted, a majority of the faculty senate's 24 members must now approve the recommendation. The group has met twice, without taking a vote, and a third session is set fur Tuesday. When the issue first arose, several student publications supported Father Schroth, with ooe, The Ram, printing a special issue demanding that he be

"There's nn doubt that a majority of students support him," said Kevin Hayes, editor in chief of The Ram.

"It's obvinus that petty, personal politics are at the root of the while thing." Father Schroth teaches several print and broadcast jnurnalism churses nn Firdham's Bronx campus, where ahnut half of the non-sectarian school's 14,000 students are anrolled. He said the official reason he received for the rejection was that he did not "fit into the future plans" of the communications of the communications of the communications of the said the said that the s tinns department. But he, too, believes the real reason is personal, ant professinnal. "Others have suggested to me that I'm too well known," Father Schroth sald recently in the dormitory ronm where he lives. "I'm usually associated with universitywide matters, and snme peo-ple in the department have taken that tn mean that I dnn't care ennugh ahnut the department." Guidelines for Tenure

School regulations regarding teoure specify that the decision be made on the applicant's teaching ability, his service to the department and to the university, and the extent of his published material in his field.

Father Schroth asserts that the consistently high evaluations his courses receive from students, his service on nearly a dozen university committees and the publication of nearly 60 nf his articles prove that he is mnre thao qualified for tenure.

In addition he is an associate of Commonweal, a liberal Catholic paper, and he has written twn books. One of them, "The Eagle and Bronklyn." is about the old Brooklyn Eagle, of which his nucle was the last publisher.

The committee that rejected his application was comprised of the three tenured professors in the communicatinns department — Edward Wakin, John Phalen and Phillip Freund—plus nne professor each from the dapartments of modern languages and philosophy. Numerous attempts to reech each of these men by telephooe have proved unsuccessful. One member of the communications department who did nnt serve nn the committee—and who esked that his name not be used—agreed that the reason for the rejectino was "absolutely personal."

"There's no question that Ray is qualified." he said. "But snmatimes people just carry their egos in such a way that it is impossible for them to get along."

Father Schroth, who is preparing to take his fioal Jesuit vows this summer, said he oever had any serinus clashes with others in the department.

"I've never even had any specific criticism," he said. "If I really didn't fit ioto their future plans, they ahould have never promnted me to associate professor."

He contends that the cuts being proposed by the city and the state are being "made oo the backs of poor black people who are the least able of fighting back."

While Dr. Holloman maintains a public posture of fighting any effort to oust him, he implied in a private moment in his spacious, wood-paneled office overlooking Foley Square that the odds are against him. Bonanza at Barnard Halted by Art Dept.

Students at Columbia University who showed up for a rummage sale held by the Barnard College library ran into an unexpected bonanza this week when hundreds of irreplacable art prints went on sale accidentally for 10 cents each.

But it was even more unexpected to the Barnard art history department, which owned the prints and had no intention of selling them.

The library was clearing out storage space and selling yellowing magazines and old, unwanted books. But it did not realize that the color. 10 by 12 inch mounted plates surveying world art history that went on sale with the rest instory that went on sale with the rest. of the material were still wanted by the art history department, and were only being stored in the library.

There was oo way of determining exactly how many prints were sold, nor what they were individually worth, but "in total, [the collectioo] was valuable," said Barbara Novak, head of the Barnard art history department,

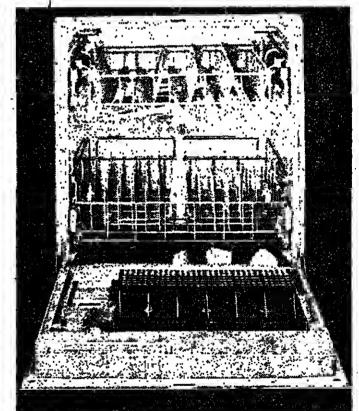

It was not until an hour and a half into the sale that she found what was happening, and rushed to stop the sale. While many of the prints had been sold, she said most had not. ONLY YOUR WHIRLPOOL DISTRIBUTOR DARES MAKE THIS OFFER...

Legislation Would Require Banks to Create a Pool for Mortgages in High-Risk Neighborhoods

By LENA WILLIAMS

As a step towards eliminating the practice of redlining, state and city officials have renewed efforts to win legislation requiring banks to form a pool to finance mortgages to businesses and homeowners in declining or high-risk neighborhoods.

A similar bill, which would have granted checking-account privileges to savings banks in exchange for contributing to a mortgage pool, was rejected last year by the Senate because of concern over mandated investments for savings institutions. These institutions won checking-account privileges this year.

Although many legislators in the Senate say they will oppose any legislation mandating investments for banking institutions, Assemblyman George A Banking Committee, was optimistic that new legislation on a mortgage pool could be passed in both houses. Sutton Gives Testimony

Sutton added, the borrower would be charged 9 percent, allowing for a one point premium on mortgage insurance.

Others who testified before the committee suggested that redlining was no "At this time, we have a commitment of $33 million for a voluntary fund to establish such a pool, that is waiting approved by the Judiciary," the Brooklyn Democrat said during public hearings last throughout New York City.

Jazz: Emery Davis Conducts Whiteman Revival

6 Singers Supplement 31-Piece Orchestra at Carnegie

The spirit of Paul Whiteman, exemplified by the big, solid arrangements his orchestra played in keeping with his hig, solid person, was revived at Carnegie Hall on Friday evening in a program called "Paul Whiteman Redis-covered." Half a century ago, Mr. Whiteman, who died in 1967, was "The King of Jazz," a title given some validity by the sprinkling of top jazzmen who studded his band—Bix Beiderbecke, Jimmy, Dorsey and Frankie Trumbauer, among others. Friday's "rediscovery" on the Whiteman band of the late 20's when these jazz stars, and others, played for the rotund leader. A 31-piece orchestra, conducted by Emery to the prime lending rate."

Davis, supplemented by six singers, played arrangements by Bill Challis, Tom Satterfield, Matty Maineck, Lenny Hayton and Ferde Grofé that were representative of the jazzier aspects of the Whiteman band.

The arrangements have worn remarkably well, particularly in Mr. Challis's snave writing for saxophones, and Mr. Davis's musician brought alive the style and attack that can be heard on the recordings of the period.

But there was, eventually, a sense of sameness in these pieces which of course, were originally presented as dance music, not as concert works— which leads one to the conclusion that Mr. Whiteman's better arrangements all must have been in more or less the

Gail Palmore-Archer

Sings Wide-Ranging Bill

Gail Palmore-Archer made her New York debut at Carnegie Recital Hall lest Sunday afternoon in a program of songs Ind arias by Glunk, Marcello, Strauss and Donizetti, capped by a selection of spirituals and a Duke Ellington medley.

On the whole, it seemed a bit premature for Mrs. Archer to venture into the classical repertory. The basic quality of her ample mezzo-soprano is promising but technical problems abound She has weighted her voice so heavily in the middle chest area that she finds it difficult to place the upper and lower registers which are precariously unsupported.

As a result her singing was tonelly

As a result her singing was tonelly meven, while phrases were choppily executed because of a lack of breath control. Interpretively Mrs. Archer invested the two Donizetti arias with generalized good spirits, but the Strauss counted mather measuring matic songs sounded rather monochromatic. Richard Doren was the efficient accompamst.

PETER G. DAVIS

Barbara Hill's Debut

Includes Franck, Barber

Barbara Hill's New York debut piano recital at Alice Tully Hall on Monday night was on the short side, hut it did contain two pieces of some substance, length and virtuosic content: Franck's Prelude, Chorale and Fugue and Samuel Barber's Piano Sonata—the latter written to show off the considerable keyboard prowess of Vladimir Horo-

Miss Hill, who holds degrees from the Eastman School and a doctorate from the University of Colorado, is a proficient technician, and neither work presented ber with a pianistic problem she could not solve. Unfortunately, her solutions rarely went further than simply getting the notes right—not a minor accomplishment certainly but too many musical matters such as col-oristic variety, shaping of phrases and a feel for internal structure went largely unattended. To her credit, Miss Hill produced a warm, rich sonority that never became edgy or clangorous, and she created a pleasingly suave effect with the C.P.E. Bach Rondo and two Debussy pieces that opened her program. These works were also deftly articulated, although here, too, a sharper profile and a greater sense of urgency would not have been amiss.

PETER G. DAVIS

Stephanie Brown Gives Careful Piano Debut

Stephanie Brown, a 20-year-old pianist who opened the 16th Young Coocert Artists series of debuts Tuesday night at the 92d Street Young Men's-Young Women's Hebrew Association, is clearly a talented performer. One trusts, however, that she will evolve further as an artist, because much of her playing Tuesday made a rather pallid impres-

Of course, part of that may have had to do with the instrumental and acoustical circumstances. When it first opened last season, the refurbished Kaufman Auditorium et the "Y" sounded harsh and overbearing for solo piaco. Since then, a good deal of work has been put into the bouse piano, and Tuesday's recital saw a full deployment of the stage curtains and a banishment of the customary sound-reflecting panels. The result certainly made the sound more mellow, but perhaps at the expense of some pungency of tone.

Miss Brown's program was an interesting one. She began with Berg's rbapsodically, chromatic Sonata (Op. 1), and continued with Bach's Toccata in D-how refreshing not to hear Bach right at the beginning, as a thinly veiled warmup exercise—and Bartók's Improvisations on Hungarian Peasant Songs (Op. 20). After the intermission ame Schumann's "Kreisleriana." In all of this, Miss Brown revealed a scrupulous musicianship end a careful, considered approach to the scores. For sheer virtuosity, she is hardly exceptional, yet the notes were negotiated with plenty of confidence. What is missing, so far at least, is a real sense of personality and command. Miss Brown lacked the pession and sense of drama one might have especially hoped to hear in the Berg and the Schumann. Yet she failed to compensate with a particularly striking lyncism. What we had instead was neat, correct and just

Mexican Cappella Antiqua Offers Banchieri Festino

The Cappella Antiqua de Mexico is a chamber chorus formed last year with the encouragement of the Mexican gov-ernment. In its United States debut Tuesday night at Carnegie Recital Hall, the 15-voice ensemble, conducted by Rufino Montero, was spirited and pliable. All of its members are professionals, and sounded it.

The major work on the a cappella program was the "Festino nella sera del Giovedi grasso avanti cena," a prebanquet entertainment written in 1608 by the Italian madrigalist Adriano Banchieri. A highlight of the performance was the unconstrained rendering of the "Contrapunto bestiale," in which the solo tenor part, a canine imitation set to the words "bow wow" sounded virtually indistinguishable from the real thing.

If seven shorter works by Mexican composers were far less memorable than Banchieri's contrapuntal dog, it was chiefly because no texts were provided or even notes indicating what the texts were about. It was a lucky thing that the longest of the Mexican compositions, "A Sor Juana Inez de la Cruz," involved more bumming than singing. Written by Julian Carrillo, who died in 1965, it is a lament that effectively—if melodramatically—juxtaposes a throaty mezzo-soprano solo with feverish buzzing from the chorus.

The other Mexican wroks on the program were by the early composers Francisco Rodriguez de Mata and Juan de Lienas, and the modern composers Carlos. Carlos Shávez, Blas Galindo, Carlos Jiménez-Mabarak and Juan Tercero. ALLEN HUGHES

Flamenco Guitar Diffused By Carlos Lomas

Carlos Lomas, a Philadelphia-born flamenco guitarist who lives and works in Spain, made his New York recital debut at Carnegie Recital Hall on Thursday night. A sizable audience came to hear him and cheered his performance enthusiastically.

This listener felt out of it all since Mr. Lomas's playing did not seem rep-resentative of the best of flamenco nor of any other kind of music making. True, the performances did have a kind of raw energy about them when Mr. Lomas got into loud and fast music, but the poetry, soul and passion of tra-ditional flamenco were largely missing.

And the musical elements of fla-menco were jumbled with elements of other musical styles in a curious eclectic mix that may qualify as good com-mercial music hut was disappointing as concert material. This may be what flamenco is developing into these days, hut if it is, flamenco as it used to be is ALLEN HUGHES

Foss Opens the Season | Miltiades Matthias, a Pianist, At Brooklyn Philharmonia With All-Mozart Concert

Many of the notes were smudged on the programs, but these, fortunately, or missing, and Mr. Matthias's interprewere relatively brief.

A very strange arrangement of the "Don Giovanni" Overture got things off to a soggy start. Mr. Foss hit upon the grotesque idea of replacing Mozart's tragic introduction with the dance music from the Act I finale in a bizarre rescoring, which included a tuba. It was an awkward pasteup job and sounded perfectly dreadful.

This hit of musical vandalism was endowed the composer's final, almost zeos Association for Lawful Elections. confessional concerto with extraordinary Former Gov. The group artist whose identification with Mozart has pledged its time and money in an now seems virtually complete.

The orchestra's reading of the 'Prague" Symphony was excellent and showed just what a responsive group of musicians the Brooklyn Philharmonia can be. The ensemble was crisply accurate, the textures translucent, the phrasing gracefully pointed and the rhythms buoyantly alive. Much of the credit undoubtedly goes to Mr. Foss, who really projects a fine sense of Mozart styla when he puts his mind to it. It was an odd decisioo to end the concert with the last two movements of the "Vesperae Solennes de Confessore," K. 339. The Philharmonia Choral Society with Jeanne Distell as soprano soloist sang rather scrappily and the music sounded like fragments wrenched out of context. Performs Unexceptional Recital Miltiades Matthias tackled an immodest program with decidedly modest means at Carnegie Recital Hall on Friday night. The young Greek-born planist, who has studied in Athens, Cincinnati and New York, simply lacked the technique tiva command was unexceptional.

Works by Bach, Bartók, Berg, Brahms and Haydn were managed with greater accuracy, but here, as elsewhere, the playing was impatient and ill-defined.

St. Luke Ensemble at Town Hall

St. Luke's Chamber Ensemble, which developed at St. Luke's Chapel in Greenwich Village in the last few years under the direction of Michael Feldman, decided to come into midtown for a couple of concerts this season, and the first of "Two at Town Hall" was given on Friday night.

Music for winds and brass was the order of the evening in a program that offered Purcell's Funeral Music for Queen Mary (1695), some pieces for military band by Beethoven, Berg's Chamber Concerto for Violin, Piano and 13 Winds (1926) and Stravinsky's "Ebony" Concerto.

But the Stravinsky work, which was written for Woody Herman, was played hy the National Jazz Ensemble with David Hopkins as clarinet soloist. Thus, be very costly to hire, we had two bearty bands on stage in the course of an hour and a half.

This was one of those concerts that must have sounded awfully good in the mind's ear when it was being planned, but in actual performance it did not hang together well.

Purcell's solemn music could have made an acceptable prelude to the Berg Concerto, but the mood was shattered by Beethoven's shrilly scored trifles, which would surely never have been performed if John Doe's name, rather than Beethoven's, had been attached to

The Berg work itself, now 50 years old, presents the kind of listening probiems that result from attempts to squeeze atonal music into forms not intended to accommodate it. There is always a nagging, wrong note Berversity that automatically keeps the ear seizing upon one hint of tonality after another in an effort to gain a listening foothold. Mosic that is much more recent and much more radical than this concerto can be far easier to listen because it is cast in forms relevant to it and sets up no misleading expecta-

Despite its awkwardness, however, the concerto does contain much that is of interest, and Ursula Oppens, pianist, and Yuval Waldman, violinist, gave vivid accounts of their parts in a performance that was commendable on the part of everyone,

The "Ebony" Concerto is pretty feeble stuff, and it is difficult to think that Stravinsky was inspired by anything other than the prospect of making a lot of money when he contrived it. It is not jazz and not good concert music, either. But since it does contain authentic Stravinskyisms in the scoring and rhythmic treatment, it may encourage jazz players to look further into the 20th-century master's music. If so, that makes it useful for some-

Bowing to a Mobile Society, the Social Register Consolidate

In what members of the Social Register Association say is an effort to keep up with mobile society, listings from all 13 cities with registers are being consolidated into one book to be known as The Social Register.

The 89-year-old publication is said to have come under the influence of Malcolm S. Forbes, the colorful, millionaire publisher of Forbes magazine, and members of his family.

According to a shareholder who received a formal uffer in a letter dated Oct. 16, 1975, and to another person close to the transaction, the Forbes family gained controlling interest in the 98 shares of stock in the Social Register Association, which publishes the book. The sources said he offered as much as $10,000 a share.

The specifics remain cloaked in some mystery. Mr. Forbes did not return telephone inquiries, his secretary said the publisher had not purchased the register and his son, Robert would only confirm that he and members of the family had become board members of the association.

Less of a mystery is that in the new Social Register, due by early December, an undisclosed number of people who have not returned questimmaires but have been in an old Register, may be "edited" out. A present board memb whn asked that her name he withheld, explained the editing this way: "There are people who haveo't sent their forms in for years and years. We are trying to remind them and wondering if they are still interested. They aren't being dropped for not huying it."

She also said the editions were being consolidated because such cities as Philadelphia, Boston and New York were no longer isolated social entities. "The aim was not to drop people," she continued. "The aim was to make it more concise. People's life styles are more concase. recopies are styles are so different now. Young college people go to college in California. They make friends in that part of the world. We have the feeling it will be very handy. Privately, I feel it will be more unvioled."

In length and width, the new book will he larger than the present approxi-mately 5-by-61/2-lnch size: it will be about eight and three-quarters inches square, according to Bert Burstell of the Adams Group, a New York printing company that prints the registers.

Local arbiters will continue to decide who goes into the book and who is removed And there will still be a "dilatory domiciles" section for people who return forms late. Also retained will be the initials that represent abbreviations fur clubs, schools and societies.

The Social Register Association has traditionally been secretive. In interviews with former and present shareholders, facilitated by handy telephone listings in the Social Register, re-ceptiveness ranged from Dr. Robert, Beekman of New York, who said, "I have no comment. Goodbye," to long, cordial chats.

In recent years the Social Register put out editions for New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Dayton (combined), San Francisco, Baltimore and Buffalo. To buy all 12 editions last year cost $250. The consolidated version will cost $28.50, plus tax, or, with the summer edition, $35, plus tax.

The publication makes a profit and pays a dividend. "It's not like I.B.M.; it's not run for that reason," said Alexander K Lawrence of the Chestnut Hill section of Philadelphia, who said he sold his shares and left the board in January because he believed he could invest his money more lucratively elseA young man who owned two shares said he had sold one for tax reasons and had kept the other because he believed the new management would make the book more profitable or that he might be hnught out at a hetter

He said the 1975 dividend was "better than having your money in a savings account . . I was happy with what it paid." The involvement of the Forbes family in the association was intriguing. While Mr. Forbes would not talk on the telephone, Mary Ann Danner, his sec-retary, said, "I can tell you he did not purchase the Social Register." But Robert, the publisher's son and a movie producer at the magazine, confirmed that he, his brother Christopher, and his sister-in-law, Sabina Beekman Forbes, a descendant of the founder, had become members of the board.

What about stock purchases? "Let's say the family has an interest; that's what I would like to say," he said.

Nevertheless, several former shareholders said stock purchases had been oegotiated by Mr. Forbes or his sons.
They said the purchases were made with checks from what they called "the Forbes corporation."

"I certainly would give any credit to the Forbeses," said Mr. Lawrence of the conselidation. "I think it shows a lot. of perspicacity on their part."

The Social Register was first published in 1887 by Louis Keller, whn had previously published a gossip sheet. According to Cleveland Amory in his book "Who Killed Society?", Mr. Keller, the son of a patent lawyer, owned a farm in Springfield, N.J., on which he estab-lished the Bakusrol Golf Clnh. Mr. Amory described him as growing up "on the fringe of society."

Mr. Keller died in 1922. Control of the register passed to members of the Beekman, Wood and Lawrence families. The first edition, in 1887, cost $1.75 and contained about 3,600 names. An 1888 edition contained an advertisement for Imperial Hair Regenerator and Caswell, Massey & Co., chemists and druggists. An 1889 edition amounced that the Register would carry notices about sales of city or country resi-dences. There would be no charge for this service, it said, but "in the event of a sale or lease being effected through its instrumentality, the usual brokerage will be expected."

Is Anybody Listening? I'm Stuck in a Holding Pattern

Come now tha Christmas catalogues, trumpeting the annual attack of greed. Glossy and glorious they are, but the peckish state of the economy would seem to dictate a cautious approach to the acquiring of things. I go even further, in fact, and was thinking of an anti-list. I would like to better our rickety lives by requesting the removal of some pesky nuisances. We could start with milk cartons, If one properly emhraces the groceries so as to be able to press the elevator button or unlock the door, milk cartons do their number. Which is to say, they spring tiny leaks that subtly, insidiously fill the bottom of the refrigerator, under the romaine, with milk, which then sours. This mess is usually discovered at a later moment of crisis. In place of the milk cartons, what would you think of some sort of glass container that could even be sterilized and reused? Another natural for the take-it-away list, it seems to me, is the faceless watch, that totemic disk that divulges no hint of the time until the owner whispers the password or touches the secret button.

I have been hoping that some investigatory group would declare these watches a cause of falling hair or failing virility, with the result that they would go away abruptly. But it ap-pears, alas, that some other intervention is needed to save me from twisting my neck to the point of hemostasis to get a casual glimpse of the top of a nearby wrist, only to find myself staring at a facade of 2001 blankness.

The Unduly Gleeful

Given my druthers, I'd also abolish the coterie of salespeople who have been exuding glee when they proclaim that all the black velveteen jackets have been gone since August.

Now it is obvious that in the egg-frying days of summer, when I thought that the superchic were basking in the Hamptons, they were in reality out stockpiling velveteen hlazers, probably four or five to the customer. And in October, wheo one is virtually turned back by the maitresse d'hotel at Chock Full if one appears without a velveteen hacking, there are none to be had except in Size 6 or other preposterous jokes. I could endure with fortitude the consequences of my tardiness were not the salespeople sn smugly satisfied at their ability to keep me from spending mnney. But I think that one simple abolition could restore something akin to harmony in our lives reduce the anxiety level nationwide, rehuld rapport and take us a step toward a life both more efficient and more humane. I refer, of course, to the hold button on the telephone.

There are telephones I have seen that look like Giant Wurlitzers, and there are others, like that of close relatives of mine, that have mily one modest hutton. Either way, these devices can drive me into an insane rage.

Call an airline, for example. The phone rings and rings, which is O.K. with me because I know sumeone's there and is eventually going to answer. But suddenly the connection is made and an eerie recorded voice says that someone will attend to my needs as soon as a line is free. And I am plunged into hold.

This call has cost a message unit already and nothing has been served. After a few minutes of hanging in a disembodied limbo, I go to another airline. But my gesture is utterly futile hecause Airline No. 1 has no idea that I'v there, clutching my green, because I been able to tell them I'm cashing out for of attention. I can't even say "pitift."

That's nothing. Doctors' offices, having tained that you are merely dying drop y: a hold with as little regret as they drop : into the sterilizer. "Now what was that the receptionist, or the nurse, or the and service or whatever it is when it finally back on the ether. The voice can't rememb you are and in reality, you are beginning doubts yourself.

A City on Hold

Offices, agencies, glaziers, plumbers—equal aplomb will answer the phone please hold on a minute" and without par learn your name will toss you into ho frustration is, well, unspeakable. If they hang up on you, you could call back an mere 8.67 cents including tax, have the s tion of shouting at them. But in hold-shouting into a well with no ears, a nothingness, an electronic void.

If one is retrieved from hold-and sometimes forgotten and frequently capone is at such a psychological disadvantal climbing up to the level of mere equality like trying to stay even with Joe Namath one's own with a computer. If you've a do a favor, you're too angry to do it cayou're calling to buy or find or get, i oozes through your request and flows de line, poisoning the transaction.

With a normal afternoon of errands complish nothing exotic I spent an end day in various holding parterns I could anyone to agree to call me back. I could anyone to remember my name of needs, ber of lines were husy, I confess, but that these were hold buttons helding each I have a vision of a city out to lunch w buttons carrying on switching each oth and forth and never coming to grips Down with the hold button, Or rather out : : !! ARTS AND LEISURE

ThePresidency And The Arts

By HILTON KRAMER

ntil recently. Americans who have a serious in-terest in the arts have seldom had any reason to look to the White House for either leadership or guidance or even simple intelligence about the cultural endeavors that define for many people around the world the true spirit of our national life. Between the Presidency and the arts in this country there has long been, if not exactly an iron curtain, then something like a plate glass wall through which each eyes the other, when at all, with varying degrees of suspicion, curiosity, wonder and distaste. From time to time, smally on ceremonial occasions, the wall is temporarily itted artists of requisite repower. ifted, artists of requisite renown are summoned to grace he White House banquet table-where, to their surprise, hey often have quite a good time, I am told—and are then ent home to resume whatever mysterious enterprise they normally pursue. The last thing in the world we expect rom a President or a Presidential candidate is a really inward, informed, compelling understanding of the life of the ats, and we are right to be skeptical about any showy dis-

This year's Presidential campaign has certainly done othing to alter this attitude. That President Ford may now inderstand who Martha Graham is, thanks to Mrs. Ford's inistrations, or that Jimmy Carter has been known to lav-ih his famous smile on Robert Redford and the other Hollyin his tamous smile on Robert Redford and the other Hollyrood stars who support his candidacy, means exactly nothg. We have seen it all before—Truman laughing it up ackstage with the cast of "The Best Man," Eisenhower recting Irving Berlin, L.B.J. embracing Carol Channing, and ren Nixon lending his plastic presence to the Grand Ol' pry in Nashville and welcoming Pearl Bailey to the White onse.

Excursions of this sort, essentially a marginal form of iblic relations, bear the same relation to a serious interest the arts that kissing babies bears to an interest in child ly-care centers. To wit: none. Even in the illustrious case the Kennedy administration, which was believed at the ne to herald a new era in relations between the White bise and the arts, illusion—beautifully stage managed, to sure—far outstripped the reality. True, Mark Rothko was vited to the Inauguration, and Robert Frost did his famous m, welcoming "an Augustan age of poetry and power," d a succession of artistic eminences—Stravinsky, Casals, haund Wilson, et al.—were invited to the White House. it after the publicity pictures and the flowery toasts, there are in the end no Government initiatives of any conseence. Is New York Still the Culture Capital?

By CLIVE BARNES

hat is the cultural capital of the world? At one time or another the answer was easy enough. In their day, Athens, Rome, even Con-stantinople, had legitimate claims. But now? The cultural leaders are surely-in tactful alphabetical order-London, New York and Paris. And this has been pretty much true for the last quarter century. These places are where the arts are not just happening but evolving.

For quite a long time, people have recognized that while London and Paris were still extraordinarily important in terms of Western culture, New York for some decades had become the true center, the leader of the trio, top of the heap. This may still be true, but a recent visit to both London and Paris, gave me pause for thought. In London, the Olivier—the last of the three auditoriums in the National Theater complex-was about to open, and in Paris there was much talk of the Pompidou Museum, which is still under construction. Could it be, I wondered, that the balance of cultural power is changing.

and New York is not perhaps as important to Western cultural life as it was, say, 10 years ago?

Where New York is lagging behind is not in ideas but in the potentiality to develop ideas. The Renaissance was time for patrons. Our present time is also a time for patrons, but the patrons are now fundamentally the government, and the British and the French governments are doing a far better job in this regard than is the government of the United States.

The reason is the simple, poisonous word: money. I have never believed that money makes the world go 'round, but the longer I live in our free world, the more I become convinced that the arts are the thing that makes the world go 'round, and that the arts need money. That is the case almost everywhere—when will all people take the arts as the final product and achieve-ment of education?—but particularly in our own artistically rich but economically imperiled country. What we need now, are not promises tomorrow, but subsidies tonight. Stephen Sondheim could put it to music.

tediy, some people are not altogether enthusiastic. They point out, with absolute validity, that the 10 years after World War II were the great literary years in Paris. Also that the major names of French literary culture did their most imaginative work from 1947 to 1958. Some feel the same about French cinema, suggesting that the scope has become restricted to intimist films, genre-studies of customs, mild satire and provincial concerns. One could cite as examples "Les Petites Anglaises," a film about schoolchildren on vacation in England, or "Cousin, Cousine," a film that is at present hav-

In Paris, there is a new spirit. Admit-

Some are also rather despondent about the future of the French theater, pointing out that the major Parisian playwright of today is the Spanish writer Arrabal. This is probably true. Even though the reputation of La Comédie Française is still high, the French theater does seem to be full of boulevard comedies of no particular

Yet where Paris is very positive is in the field of the fine arts. An art critic pointed out that the Le Tour exhibition of a few years ago "represent ed a new inventiveness and creativity on the part of scholars," he was also very positive about what he called "the striking upgrading of the staff of the Louvre' and suggested that in painting and sculpture "for the first time in some years Paris is in a creative fer-

This seems to be true, despite the fact that France has been having-its difficulties with culture. Michel Guy, the former Minister of Culture, apparently made many promises to arts organizations that he was unable to fulfill, and Françoise Giraud, the new minister, is faced with a huge program and only a half of one percent of the total national budget. (In contrast, the National Endowment for the Arts gets only .02 percent of the total U.S. budget.)

Yet somehow Paris, just like London, still seems alive. There are two new things in Paris. The first of them is terribly old-the Paris Opera, and the second really is new-the Centre national d'art et de culture Georges Poin-

Russia. There had been invitations from all over the world for a decade. Then, in September, after long negotiations, the enterprising Yugoslav director Mira Trailovic succeeded in bringing Lyubi-mov and 90 members of the Taganka to Belgrade to participate in the second World Theater Festival, an annual event sponsored by the Theatre des Nations. Though there was on display a jarkable variety of theatrical ductions with Robert Wilson and Philip Glass's 'Einstein on the Beach,' Peter Brook's "The Ik," and Samuel Beckett's own staging of "Waiting For Godot" among the most memorablethe presence of the Russians gave the festival a special excitement.

Lyubimov's reputation as an inconoclast struggling to break the stultifying influence of museum-like establishment theaters in the Soviet Union had ceded him, and in production of Boris Pasternak translation of

"Hamlet," which opened the festival, attracted huge, enthusiastic crowds. A fews days later the company presented, also to large but not so responsive audiences, "Here the Dawns Are Quiet" and "Ten Days That Shook the World" -not the best examples of their repertory, but, as one wise East European said, "If you want to get the mest, you have to take the bones as well." "Hamlet" was the meat, In Moscow,

Lyubimov's production is considered a revolutionary departure from tradition. For some viewers, accustomed to updated Shakespeare, it seemed a bit lean. Compared, however, to the moribund "Ten Days," an agitprop relic dramatizing John Reed's version of the 1918 Revolution, replete with red flags, marching soldiers and numerous photos of a noble Lenin pointing the way, and to "Here the Dawns Are Quiet," a backneyed, sentimental elegy to Russian World War II partisans, the "Hamiet" nt one word in the remarks that follow is to be takeo as a reflection upon Maria Scheil. Miss Scheil is appearing, swathed in beaded black velvet, in Pavel Kohout's "Poor Murderer," a Czech play that has thus far been denied performance in its homeland. for either murder or lunacy, though not even he is certain which. (Retracing his youth, he asks "Where did childhood end and Hamlet begin, where did Hamlet end and madness begin, where did madness end and I begin?" This turns out to be e very good question.) In any event, he was — no doubt still is — deeply in love with Miss Schell, though the passion was less than mutual. (Miss Schell langhed, pressing her palm against her open lips to hide embarrassment, when he presented her with roses.) Mr. Luckinbill has thereupon turned her over, romantically speaking, to his aging mentor, Kevin McCarthy, sure thet Miss Schell will come to love him more in his absence (during his "emptiness" is the way he phrases it) than she does face to face on a stage or a railway platform.

The acting company with which both have worked has assembled for the day's event, hoping that Mr. Luckinbill will in some way make clear just what he has done to deserve confinement. Its members are willing to help enact the past, Miss Schell as earnestly as any. It is when she rises to do so that theater begins at the Barrymore, vanishing rather abruptly again each time she retires. Seated, she has seemed wan, worn, blurred. Rising, she smiles, and with that very first smile 10 years fall away from her; it's as though the Northern Lights had begun a rather spectacular display and she'd finund herself unexpectedly caught in a transfixing, pulsing shaft.

Stepping nnto a small curtained stage to repeat lines Mr. Luckinbill rapidly throws her wey, she suddenly gives all of us — including some quite distinguished performers seated about her — lessons in acting. Mr. Luckinbill, of course, deliberately refrains from inflecting the phrases; he's supposed to be prompting. But Miss Schell, with a quickness that makes her adroitness breathtaking, finds new colors for them all, stresses we hadn't thought of, meanings in which we can very well believe.

The sequence is brief, alas; and we hear no such freshness of tone or vigor of thought again until Miss Schell returns for a fragment of the "Hamlet" closet-scene (her range extends to Gertrude, and probably a castle or two Continued on Page 30

ast spring an actress friend of Woodie King Ir. told him about a "fantastic" evening of dramatic poetry that she and other black ectresses were referring in an out-of-the-wey bar on the Lower East Side. Mr. King, director of Henry Street Settlemeot's New Federal Theater, went that night to the II P.M. performance in the bar, egreed that the play was fantastic and immediately arranged for it to be transferred to his theater.

Six weeks later, Ntozake Shange's "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/When the Rainbow Is Enus" opened at the nonprofit Henry Street playhouse, Then it moved to Joseph Papp's Public Theater where it ran all summer to capacity audiences. This fall it opened on Broadway and became the season's first dramatic suc-

This quick chain of events is oot the first time that the enterprising Mr. King has been involved in discovering new plays and expanding their audiences. From Henry Street have come, among others, Ed Bullins'a "The Taking of Miss Janie" and Ron Milner's "What the Wine Sellers Buy" (both of which were transferred by Mr. Papp to Lincolo Center) as well as Ramiro Ramirez's "Mondongn," which toured N2w York last summer under the auspices of Mr. Papp's Mobile Theater.

lo the case of Leslie Lee's "The First Breeze of Summer," Mr. King had the play first, then brought it to the Negro Ensemble Company because he felt that the work would benefit from the N.E.C.'s distinguished ensemble of actors, Actually, some of the strongest Henry Street plays have not moved uptown: works such as Doo Evans's "Showdown," a rollicking adaptation of "The Taming of the Shrew" into a contemporary black idiom; "Sidnee Poet Heroical," Imamu Amiri Baraka's savage assault oo black culture heroes; and Mr. Bullins's "In New England Winter,"

Under Mr. King's leadership, Henry Street has become a prime generator of new black plays. In common, many of these plays bave been naturalistic and socially conscious (though not polemical). A number of them have dealt with, as Mr. King describes it, "split black families." Occasiooally the plays are roughhewn and unpolished, but they are charged with energy, conviction and passion. I have never been bored at Henry Street, and, almost always, I have been stimulated.

A large share of the excitement is furnished by the eudience, There is an Immediate responsiveness: people cheer, applaud, laugh and jeer. If the audience doesn't like something, that feeling is instantly communicated, This give - and - take between theatergoers and theater can become so rambunctious that it can upset an unwary observer. One author, new to Henry Street, was so enraged at the raucous audience at a performance of his play that he told everyone to shut up. Having seen a number of plays over the years at Henry Street, I would give bigh marks for artistic perception and critical judgment both to Mr. King and also to the audience. They know when something is good, and their instincts are equally accurate when something is bad. This is truly a popular theater. Theatergoing becomes e family event—like going to the ballpark, baving a picnic, or sitting io froot of the bodega oo a warm summer evening. Entire families turn out for a play, from old people to infants in arms. Henry Street actors are accustomed to hearing squalling babies oo opening night. "They doo't have babysitters," says Mr. King.

For many, it is an introduction to theater. "Some of the 15- and 16-year-olds haveo't even been to Times Square," says Mr. King. "After seeing six or seven of our plays, then they go to Broadway." One obvious reason why Continued on Page 15

'A strange, dazzling play that brings distinction to our season.

An intellectual play that zigzags across the staga and ricochets across the mind. Playwright Kohout does represent European writing at its best and most imaginative. This play'e literary allusions are exquisitely contrived. I recommend the work most strongly—it leads the spectator quite hypnotized into the antechambers, rooms and dungeons of madness, it has been tautly directed by Harbart Berghof, end the central cheracter, is brilllantly played in ell dimensions by Laurence Luckinbill. The acting needed to be superb-it is. Maria Schell end Kevin McCarity ere desperately eloquent. Exciting, unaxpected and life-giving, 'Poor Murderer' is going to be one of the highlights of our season."

—CLIVE BARNES, NEW YORK TIMES

Superb performances from one of the finest casts you'll ever see on an American stage.

There is real pleasure in an engagement with a good mind a genuine satisfaction in watching first class theater talent at work. Luckinbill is formideble in the virtuoso role of the tormented ector. Miss Schell, at the moment, the most beautiful women in the world. Her performance is one of those magical events one remembers for a lifetime. This is acting that blossoms beyond reason into incandescence and miracle. There heven't been meny genulnely intellectual pleys lately and there certainly haven't been meny that present, as 'Poor Murderer' does, theater performance as serious craft." -MARTIN GOTTFRIED, NEW YORK POST

Engrossing and entertaining.

I was held by the action and the ecting and by the haunting quelity. Startled, touched and rewarded by this complex but intellectually and emotionally stimulating play." —GEORGE OPPENHEIMER, NEWSDAY

A drama of intensity and integrity. Instinctively theatrical. Exhilirating.

Strangely intense drama for the alert of mind...comes through with eloquence. An exhilirating piece of stage literature, provocative and important on an emotional level. The production is an impressive one and one of its greatest glories is the presence of Maria Schell, an inspired actress with great Insight, 'Poor Murderer' has an exceptionally illustrious cast; Kevin McCarthy, Ruth Ford, Larry Gates, Felicia Monteleagre end Julie Garfield." -WILLIAM A. RAIDY, LONG ISLAND PRESS

"Fascinating psychological thriller. A work of power and resonance.

A complex tele about the force of love, Studded with unexpected twists and turns. Herbert Berghot proves thet he is one of our most subtle directors. He has staged the pley in such a compelling manner that one sits enthralled. The cast is impressive. Laurence Luckinbill offers a virtuoso turn keeping the audience in suspense. Maria Schell imperts a very speciel radiance."—EMORY LEWIS, THE RECORD

"Highly theatrical. An intriguing play.

A pley whose meaning expands rather than contracts as the story unfolds. Berghof has directed the play with clarity and e vigorous energy. Laurence Luckinbill gives e marvelously mercuriel. performance. Maria Schell is radiant in the role. Kevin McCarthy, Ruth Ford and Larry Gates also contribute striking performances. 'Poor Murderer' is intellectual and will eppeal most to those who take theater seriously. We can be thankful that we—unlike Mr. Kohout and his fellow Czechs-are free to see it."

The production is superb with radiant Maria Schell. Laurence Luckinblll is brilliant. Kevin McCerthy is highly effective. Will be talked about for a long time."

—YIRGIL SCUDDER, WNWS-FM

Exceptionally provocative play.

Anyone with even a scintilla of interest in contamporary theatre will wish to make his way to the Ethel Barrymore, where an exceptionally able production of an exceptionelly provocative play has just opened. The cast has rare excellence. I count on you to be astonished and well satisfied." -BRENDAN GILL, THE NEW YORKER

A: Well, we have played in Bulgaria. But as the saying goes, a hen is not a bird and Bulgaria is not really crossing the frontier.

Why did it take so long?

Well, we have a rather complicated epproach to art in the Soviet Union, and the highest authorities on these matters didn't think the time was ripe for us to go. You see, I oever take part in any negotiations on tours abroad. It is the Ministry of Culture that decides when we shall go. And our tastes do not coincide. If I were asked what plays to bring ehroad, I would have made a different selection. I would have brought the "Hamlet." of course, hut not "Ten Days That Shook the World." It's an old work, more than 10 years old.

You mean it was not your decision to bring "Ten Days"?

No. What I would have loved to show here is "The Wooden Horses" by Fyodor Abramov. As you know, Abramov worked for the Novy Mir (New World) journal when Aleksandr Tvardovsky was editor-in-chief. Tvardovsky was a great poet himself and he founded the New World magazine and published a new group of very young and very gift-ed poets. (Note: "The Wooden Horses" is about the goodness of the old peasantry before collectivization. New World is a liberal magazine; Tverdovsky was responsible for the first printing of Solzhenitsyn's "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich" and others who were considered liberals during tha Khrushchev years. He was removed from his post in 1970 and died in 1971.) Also at our theater we play a whole secies of what we call poetic performances: Voznesensky, Mayakovsky, Pushkin. We should have brought that. It would have shown a better and more accurate picture of what we are doing. Isn't it odd to be still showings plays like "Ten Days," plays about the revo-lution? There must be some contemporary themes that are more interesting.

I agree. But on the other hand, "Ten Days" did something for our theater. I tried to establish in that play a kind of polemic with other established theaters, like the Moscow Art Theater, which were showing the revolution in a more traditional way, and I tried to do something else with the work-to mix various forms, like circus technique, pantomime, and shadow play. But of course "Ten Days" is very old. So is our "Hamlet"; we've been playing it almost five years.

When I was in-Moscow I saw a number of plays still dealing with the Second World War. Why do you rely on the same material all the time? Even your production of "Here the Dawns Are Quiet" is a simplistic war tale.

Well, I agree that it isn't the best literature. But when I did that play. I was sort of in a complicated situation at the time. There were certain things I could do, and certain things I wanted to do and could not do. So I took this novel because it was about the war-

My situation is always complicated. There are various reasons, Many people doo't like what I'm doing. I have to find a certain repertory, and I have to submit it for approval, and I have to receive permission to begin the rebearsals, and then I have to produce Who gives you that approval?

You have to be very clever to stage a oew play. I had to wait seven years to stage one play. It was e dramatization from a book called "The Story of Feyodor Kushkin" by Mozhayev and I called the play "Alive." The author was one of those writers who belonged to the new group from New World megazine. (Note: The novel is about a man who wants to leave a collective farm.) I had received the permission to dramatize the book and I was trying to stage it for about seven years. Three times I changed it, and it was ready to be played, and they always told me that I would have to make more changes, and then I did make the required changes, and then I would get it back, and there would still be more changes to make, and so forth.

What exactly did they disapprove of in this play?

They are extremely cautious. We have a number of conservative people who have certain opinions, particularly among the anthorities that are in charge of the arts. And they look with suspicion at the artists. Even our great leader, "Josef the Beautiful," used to say when he wanted to punish someone, "Look, I'll turn you over to the artists." But see, I'm telling you all this now. You see, I am allowed to say all this now. I am not afraid of saying it. I couldn't say it then. Now, I would like to stage Dostoevsky's "The Possessed." But I couldn't do it quite yet. The subject of "The Possessed" is what you. I am going, boringly, for my health, but I will be back."

Stay on your toes, Santa Morfica. 5till trim, atill angular at 49, Tynan is, conversationally, as good and as outrageous an ever. He has a new sexuel entertainment in the West End, called "Carte Blanche," a distant cousin to "Oh! Calcutta!", which seven years ago (it seems longer, perhaps because the intervening revolution has seemed to pall) established hlm as something more than just a very good writer end critic. He has some ideas about what's wrong with Britain, and with socialism, which are at variance with those of the present government. And he has some unorthodox notions about education, and a few choice words about the present direction of the National Theater, where he served as literary director for 10 years under Sir Laurence Olivier before Peter Hell assumed command (at which point Tynan's relationship with the National fell apart).

To take the play first, "Carte Blanche" is, like its predecessor, a choreography of nudes-bodies in tableaux. Its passions are heterosexual, but not entirely. It has nothing to do with courtship or marriage. It is, simply, tribute in song and dance to a three-letter word beginning with s and ending with x.

Tynan told interviewers after the show opened that he was pleased that there were no riots in the streets, oo outbreaks of puritan aggression, "With

But the audience was one thing, the newspaper reviewers another. He suspects, darkly, that a few of them missed the point. "The purpose of the show is to turn people on," he said. "We offer nothing else. Now, it is obviously difficult for the man from The Times or The Guardian to say, this show did or did not turn me on sexual. ly. To say that means he has to make certain admissions. He also has to abandoo his usual perceptions. So he begins to look for artistic merit. To my dismay, the reviews on that count were not wholly bad. Some actually found artistic merit. I asked myself the next day: Where did we go wrong?"

Would the play travel to America? "It depends on what you mean by travel," he said, "If you mean changing the show a bit en route, the answer could be yes. 'Calcutta' was changed for Americao audiences, made 'funnier' in a convectional sense. There are cultural differences that must be taken into accouot; perhaps there is greater decadence in ours. We tend to regard sex as a civilized nocturnal divertissement, you Americans want it to be broedly funny."

A sip of wine, and he was into American politics. His interviewer suggested that Americans were, especially in election years, sensitive to the conventional moralities. 'You do want your religion up froot."

he said, without total disapprovel. "Look at Carter, even Ford. The public figure feels he must make a commitment to God before he declares a commitment to social change. But I may have to exempt Mrs. Ford from that. That comment of hers that she wouldn't be shaken to the roots to discover that her daughter had taken a lover. That could be a breakthrough."

day, "the jungle drums were pounding. Perhaps there has been a change in attitudes. Clearly, this time around, more people seemed to think that sex was a subject fit for presentation and

Kenneth Tynan: "I'm a climatic émigré.'

What Tynan worries about is inhibitions, end he sees them in the less easily choreographed areas of politics and economics. He is not really comfortable with the middle-of-the-road, mixedeconomy types who are running Brit-ain, the Callaghans and Healeys end Croslands and Jenkinses and even some union leaders. His man is Anthooy-Wedgwood Benn, the well-born leftwinger who wants to move more quickly toward government ownership of the means of production, even higher taxes if need be. To Tynan, the present cozy relationship between business, labor and Whitehall simply reinforces dis-tinctions between workers and management, between the people who quit school and start looking for jobs at age 16 and those who keep books and

The 'Monster' Was Born in Washington

To the Editor:
Why did "puzzlement" replace "confident expectation"? The letdown experienced by Walter Kerr et al regarding the arrival of "A Texas Trilogy" may well baffle New Yorkers, but it should surprise Washington audiences —the collective Godparents of Preston Jones's plays-not at all. We saw it coming.

Although I was personally moved by the plays, to argue the relative merits of Mr. Jones's work is rather pointless. But what happened in Washington was really quite simple. Our critics (and, God forbid, a few people guilty of that old phenomenon, "word of mouth") found a new writer worthy of audience attention, whose plays had been beautifully mounted with approprietely un-spectacular staging. That such behavior —which should be the very basis for theater-going in this country-could produce a monster, the "Much Anticipated Eveot," is e tragedy.

HAL CORLEY Reston, Va.

To the Editor: I'm not sure what is meant by "regional theater" vs. Broadway standards as discussed by Walter Kerr and a number of other New York reviewers in relation to Preston Jones's "Texas Trilogy." but I do know that I don't like the tone of unwarranted superiority redolent in those reviews.

If by "regional theater" one means theatrical works originating in and reflecting the unique color of regional locales—a definition Walter Kenr raises and theo seems to reject-it seems to me that Broadway has often been more receptive toward such theater than theaters elsewhere in the country (as in the cases of "Green Grow the Lilacs," "Tobacco Road," and even "Shenandoah"). Certainly the most provincial dramas have been those comedies, musical and otherwise, that have pleased Broadway audiences over the years with strictly local topical

What sort of perverse standards dictate the put-downs of the Jones plays and the grudgingly lukewarm praise for their productions while "Grease," "Pip-pin," "California Suite," "Going Up," etc., can boast money-making rave quotations from the New York critics? The cynical view of New York theater values, which Alexander Cohen tried to combat in his Oct. 3 letter, is vastly encouraged by the performance of the New York theater critics.

She was the illegitimate daughter of a prostitute. She became the greatest actress of her century. The fire that made her a legend also burned in her private life. She demanded to be paid in gold. She often slept in a coffin. She had a child by a prince but refused to marry him. Her leading man was her lover for that season. She brought tears to the eyes of audiences, even those who could not understand the language she spoke.

> Her last name was Bernhardt, but to the world she was Sarah.

Reviving Denishawn After 50 Years

By WALTER TERRY

long-distance query was received with a curiously electrifying silence. Then came the answer: "I have been waiting for this telephone call all of my life."

From New York City, Joyce Trisler, founder-director of a lively moderndance repertory group called Danscompany, had asked an 80-year-old lady in San Francisco, "How would you like to come to New York and do a whole evening of Denishawn?" The lady who said "yes" was Klarna Pinska, a former dancer and teacher who, for the last 60 years, has been the unofficial guardian of the illustrious American dance traditions established by Ruth St. Denis and Ted Danscompany will perform "The Spirit of Denishawn' -- Miss Pinska's staging of Oriental and abstract dances created by "Miss Ruth" (as she was known around the world) and Shawnthis Thursday through Sunday at the Theater of the Riverside Church. The program will give most New York dancegoers their first glimpse of historic works that have oot been performed for almost half a century.

The Denishawn traditions, which Miss Trisler observes "are to modern' dance what Petipa and Bournonville are to ballet," grew nut of the dancing school founded by Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn in Los Angeles in 1915. The oame Denishawn, a fusion of the two dancers' own names, became widely known as Miss St. Denis and Shawn led touring companies in thousands of performances around the country and much of the world for 16 years. In addition, Denishawn gained national prestige as a large-scale educational institution, with franchised schools in cities from coast to coast.

But why Denishawn presumably dead for almost half a century-in 1976? And why should Joyce Trisler, who hadn't even been born when Denishawn gave its farewell performances in 1931 to audiences of more than 50,000 at New Ynrk's Lewisohn Stadium, devote a year of her career to producing a single program that will be given only four times in a tiny theater for audiences which cannot possibly total 1,500? Why? Because Miss Trisler had inadvertantly discovered for herself, and perhaps for many of her colleagues, her American dance heritage. Both Klarna Pinska and Joyce Trisler belong to that family tree of American modern dance rooted in the principles of Isadora Duncan in the theater-arts concepts of Ruth St. Denis and in the training disciplines of Ted Shawn. Miss St. Denis and Shawn, through marriage, partnership and the union of their nes, gave birth to a tradition which, in turn, prodoced Martha Graham, Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman, the mighty titans of modern dance. who in due course sired Merce Cun-ning, José Limón and more. Joyce Trisler, the youngest and last protégée of the late Doris Humphrey, and Klarna Pinska, who was around when Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn were on their honeymoon tour of one-night stands in 1914, are determined to give Denishawn an authentic comeback.

Denishawn is to modern dance what Petipa and Bournonville are to ballet.'

It will be a modest comeback, however, for Danscompany is a small troupe, and there are not sufficient funds to restage, say, Miss St. Denis's Babylonian ballet, "Ishtar of the Seven Gates" (a production originally boasting 800 tons of scenery!), or Shawn's Aztec-Toltec spectacle, "Xochitl," created for Martha Graham and in which she toured America for two Danscompany will concentrate oo another, non-exotic aspect of Denishawn-innovative works that Ruth St. Denis called "music visualizations." This was a choreographic concept which, in later years, George Balanchine would elevate to new heights of creativity in his abstract dances that characterize contemporary ballet.

"Music visualizations" do not interpret music, but give physical substance to sounds. They reflect not only the beat of the music but also its structure (cootrapuntal, fugal, polyphonic, etc.), dynamic gradations, melodic contours, rhythmic pulses and emotional

The Danscompany program will feature "visualizations" of Brahms waltzes. Beethoven's "Pathétique," sonata, Debussy's second "Arabesque," a number of Bach Inventions and Schumann's "Soaring." There will also be revivals of such Oriental-style classics as Miss St. Denis's "Dance of the Red and Gold Sari" and Shawn's "Japanese Spear" and "Gnosienne," a Cretan dance set to music hy Satie.

The program will begin with a Denishawn technique study arranged by Miss Pinska. Dance teachers and students will probably find it unlike any training method they have encountered. Ruth St. Denis, who was almost eotirely self-taught, devised a "backward" technique, based on analyzing her finished dances and deriving a technique from them.

Groundwork for "The Spirit of Denishawn" began a few years ago, when Joyce Trisler went to San Francisco to meet Klarna Pinska. "I was offered a job in San Francisco to choreograph for a production of the opera 'Death in Venice,' she recalls. "I took it, not because I wanted to do the opera, but because I had to meet Klarna; I had

It took Miss Trisler two years to raise funds for the project. Foundations turned her down, but finally the National Endowment for the Arts came through with a matching grant. "The Spirit of Denishawn" will be produced for $12,500. If the program is a success, Danscompany will oot only keep it as a complete show in its repertory, but Miss Trisler will launch a campaign to stage, with the lavish sets and costumes of the original, Shawn's "Xo-Martha Graham a national star in 1921.

Klarna Pinska, who still teaches Denishawn in San Francisco, is excited by her collaboration with Danscompa-ny. "I felt that while I was here on this earth and before I transcended," she says, "I wanted to leave something in the best presentation possible so that when people looked at Denishawn dances, they would not simply be museum pieces. Now I feel for Miss Ruth and Ted that the time is ripe. Right now we're as hot as we'll ever be.

"I had thought first that San Francisco could do it, but no, it's too provincial there, It had to be professionals dancing. It had to be New York."

Joyce Trisler is equally enthusiastic about the collaboration, for through Klarna Pinska, she and her company are reliving a golden age of dance. "Good God!" she exclaims, "We can't let Denishawn slip away while Klarna still with us."

'Seven-Per-Cent Solution' Movie An Exhilarating Collector's Item

By VINCENT CANBY

After two months in virtual seclusion, Sherlock Holmes summons his old friend and biographer, Dr. Watson, to his rooms in Baker Street. Dr. Watson, settled family man that he has become, is shocked by both the manner and the appearance of Holmes. He has always been thin but he is now rail-like. Worse, though, is Holmes's behavior. Either he has become a lunatuc or he has stumbled onto the grandest criminal conspiracy of his

His door bolted against the evil lurking outside, Holmes strides about his untidy, gas-lit study talking in disjointed fashioo about a certain Professor Moriarty, a genius, a philosopher, an abstract thinker, a fierd of fiends whose existence Holmes has been in the process of deducing for the last two months. The name of Moriarty means oothing to Watson.

"There's the genius and the wonder of tha thing." exclaims Holmes, his eyes lighting up like the windows in an empty house one suddenly discovers to be haunted. "The man pervades I.onhaunted. "The man pervades non-don, the Western world, even," he says, "and no one has ever heard of him!" At which point Watson notices the empty syringe on Holmes's desk. His friend has passed into the uncharted outer reaches of cocaine madness. Watson must act at once.

The adventure is called "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution," which, as adapted by Nicholas Meyer from his best-selling nove; and directed and produced by Herbert Ross, is nothing less than the most exhibitating entertainment of the film year to date. Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ross have taken a few small liberties with the book (which are all to the good) but the essential conceit remains.

The Cast

THE SEVEN-PER-CENT SOLUTION, directed and produced by Herbard Ross; societally by Nicholas Meyer, based on his nove : executive producers, Alex Wintisky and Arines Sellers; our-tor of photography. Oswald Morris; mus cum Addison; editor, Chris Barnes; distributed by Universal Producer Romolog time: 113 minutes, Ar the Pleza Theater, 58th Street east of Madison Avenue. This film has been rated PG. Sherlock Holmes.

That is that Watson, in a des-perate effort to save Holmes's lite, must somehow get Holmes to Vienna for treatment by a new young doctor named Sigmund Freud, and that Holmes and Freud, two of the greatest minds of their time, join and the state of their time, join the state of their time, join the state of t forces to solve a diaholical involving a beautiful, red-haired musical comedy star, an arrogant, dishonorable German baron, an amorous Turkish pasha and a great train chase through Austria to the very borders of the Ottoman Empire.

The film, which opened yester-day at the Plaza Theater, is popu-lar movie-making at its most stylar movie-making at its most stylish. It's simultaneously contemporary in its sensibility and faithful to the courtly mood and decent spirit of the Sir Arthur Conan Doyle originals. It's also one of the most handsome evocations of a vanished period (circa 1850) since "Murder on the Orient Express," and a collector's item in terms of performances.
Nicol Williamson creates an entirely new Sherlock Holmes within girely new Sherlock Holmes within our memories of all the old ones. a man of incomparable mental brilliance who walks the world pursued hy the hallucinations of his addiction. Alan Arkin is the good

Dr. Freud at the beginning of his career, somewhat shy of manner, immensely kind, and a little self-conscious about discussing the latest theories that have been getting him into hot water all over Vienna.

Laurence Olivier is marvelous as Professor Moriarty, an extremely tentative, timid old fellow to be such a tycoon of crime, and Van-essa Redgrave is the unfortunate lady whose beauty drives mad those men who are rich and power-

The particular revelation of "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution" is Robert Duvall, one of America's best actors, who plays the English Dr. Watson with such wit and control that it's difficult to believe he's ever played an American with equal conviction. It's a very funny performance, and very important to the overall shape and cohesion of the film.

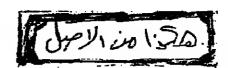

Not since John Huston's "The Man Who Would Be King" and Sidney Lumet's "Murder on the Orient Express" has there been a new film that manages so successfully to recall the innocent qualities one associates with pre-World War II movies without being simple-minded or instant camp. The initial credit must go to Mr. Meyer, whose novel is a fine piece of literary fooling, but Mr. Ross has been equally clever and disciplined in realizing its screen potential. It's by far the best work he's done to date.

"The Seven-Per-Cent Solution" has been rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested"), which is o way of alerting parents of small children to 0 fuzzily photographed primol-scene conclusion, some slightly nightmarish scenes involving Holmes's cocaine cure, and o sequence in o Viennese bordello that, when I was 5 years old, I would have instantly recognized as a lively, eccentric hotel,

His solutions lie in reform of the educational system and (naturally) the theater. He would get rid of the public (that is, private) schools, and all other distinctions in education. He says he has never quite forgiven Apeurin Bevan, the great Socialist teader for dismissing the public school issue as an "irrelevance." He would forcibly wrench the working class out of the boxes" in which they live and create what does not in his view exist in Britain: "a politically and culturally literate

Would this create (not incidentally) a more vigorous and sympathetic audience for his kind of theater? It was an easy question, an underhand softball to a ravenous cleanup hitter. ...

"Hell, yes. Break down the barriers and you will begin to create a society that is receptive to plays. Give the working man's family an idea of equality—not just equality with the big shots but equality among the sexes, among the women and children in that among the women and begin to move family—and people will begin to move directions. Poet Heroical" because he wanted to bring Baraka back into the theater. Onc problem that he faces, he says, is that there are few good black directors. If a director on his list is particularly enthusiastic about a project, Mr. King will give it special consideration.

Actually, one growing concern is finding plays. Mr. King thinks that the tide of black plays has somewhat abated, that new as well as established writers are thinking more carefully in commercial terms. "If they're at Henry Street because they think the play might move out commercially or that solicit work from writers that he likes He is also a regular observer at the Frank Silvers Writers Workshop. One advantage that he has is the informality of his operation. He keeps an open schedule and can suddenly slip in a show that arouses his enthusiasm, as he did with "Colored Girls." The time between play selection and play production is shorter than at most theaters, which can be a disadvantage. Sometimes a work will reach the stage prematurely. Rehearsals are brief and actors are paid only for performances ($65 a week for the usual two-week, twelve-performance run; the director makes $250). Considering the quality of the work, the theater's budget is relatively small, currently $193,000, which comes from public and private foundations. The average cost of a productioo is under $10,000.

When Mr. King (who is 38 and the father of three) is not busy producing at Henry Street, he is working as an actor and as a director. This season he will stage "Sizwe Banzi Is Dead" at the Pittsburgh Public Theater and "First Breeze of Summer" at the Center Stage in Baltimore, One of his principal objectives and one reason for his frequent travels-is to encourage regional theaters to do black plays.

This year at Henry Street he plans to put on five plays, perhaps two more if Mr. Papp decides to lend co-production support as be has in the past; Par and King have become a dynamic black theater producing team. The Henry Street season will open Nov. 11 with Edgar White's "The Defense," to be followed by two revivals of plays from the old Federal Theater, Orson Welles's black version of "Macbeth" and Owen Dotson's "The Divine Comedy"; either Ed Bullins's "Do-Wah," a fifties musical or Charles Fuller's "Jerry Bland and the Blandelles Featuring Miss Marva James"; and Martie Evans-Charles "African Interlude." No matter how well the plays do, the audience is guaranteed to be a hit.

The play's defenders will claim it did not attempt to portray the movement, only Dr. King. But when a man's entire life is so identified and interwoven with a movement, such a distinction is historically and dramatically invalid.

One further note: Billy Dee Williams, albeit handsome and dapper, simply lacks the dramatic scope to convey the complexities and commitment of Dr. King. Casting Mr. Williams as Dr. King, however, insured audience oohs and ashs and box-office receipts! from the growing followers of the country's latest matinee idol. Some readers and critics may feel

o 1893 Arthur Conan Doyle attempted to rid bimself of his most popular literary creation by allowing Sherlock Holmes to disappear into the falls at Reichenbach, but Holmes's soul would not be still. Raymond Massey, Robert Rendel and Reginald Owen, who had played Wotson to Clive Brook's Holmes in "Sherlock Holmes" in 1932 and the following year took over the star part in another adaptation of "A Study in Scarlet." In 1939 Besil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce began their association with the Holmes-Watson stories that, after two films, were abruptly updated to World War II Washington where Holmes became the Roosevelt administration's favorite

Peter Cushing pleyed Holmes in atill another remake of "The Hound of The Baskervilles" in 1959 and Christopher Lee, sometime monster to Cushing's Dr. Frankenstein, played Holmes in two German-made films in 1960-1961. Since then John Neville and Donald Houston have been seen as Holmes and Watson in "A Study in Terror" (1965), Billy Wilder examined the relationship between Holmes and Watsoo io "The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes" (1970), and last year, Gene Wilder presented us with his very funny, sometimes alapstick variation on the theme, "Sherlock Holmes's Smarter Brother."

You might get the impression that Holmes should be allowed to retire. Not et all. The Sherlock Holmes conceived by Mr. Meyer and played by Mr. Williamson in the new Ross film is the practically perfect hero for our addled, skeptical, neurotic times, a fellow who's sinking fast but who is still salvageable with some help from his friends and particularly from the good doctor in Vienna. Mr. Meyer's novel is literary fooling of rare wit and imagination, both of which have been preserved in a film that succeeds in being faithful to the atyle and spirit of Conan Doyle while exploring regions of Holmes's subconscious that might have shaken Conan Doyle down to his boots. It's oot that Conan Doyle didn't know, but there are some things gentlemen

The adventure of "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution" gets underway when Dr. Wetson realizes that he must do something immediately to save his friend Holmes from the certain death that his cocaine addiction holds in store. There's only one man in the world who can help, e young Viennese doctor named Sigmund Freud who has cured himself of the same damnable vice. The hitch: Holmes will oot go willingly to Vienna. Says Watson to Sherlock'a brother Mycroft, "He feels it generates an unhealthy excitement in the criminal classes when he leaves London

Their plan is to persuade timid old Prof. Moriarty, whom the maddened Holmes has begun to believe is the archcriminal of the Western world, to go to Vienna and to allow Holmes to believe that he is tracking this archcriminal to his lair, which, indeed, will turn out to be Freud's consulting room. With the assistance of e bloodhound oamed Toby, who once trailed an orangutan through the sewers of Marseilles, the plan works, although, after Holmes, Watson and Toby arrive in Vienna, and after Holmes has submitted to Freud'a treatment, they all become embroiled in a mystery that only the combined powers of Holmes and Freud can solve.

Among other elements this part of the adventure involves a beautiful, red-haired musical-comedy star (Vanessa Redgrave) who has thrown herself into the Danube (I wonder what the real Freud would have to say about the frequency with which Conan Doyle womeo leap from bridges), an uoscrupulous German baron, s Turkish pasha with more money and concubines than are good for him, and, finally, a whiz-bang of a train chase through the Austrian countryside.

Mr. Meyer and Mr. Ross know their Sherlock Holmes and their Sigmund Freud well enough to he able to kid them both royally in a manner that is immensely respectful to their individual but aligned geniuses. The performers also are in notable form, Williamson, Duvall, Arkin and Olivier seem to be baving the times of their lives, Ken Adam, who designed the turn-of-the-century settings, Oswald Morris, the cinematographer, and John Addison, who composed the score, are some of the talents behind

"The Seven-Per-Cent Solution" is entertainment of such bigh, intelligent order that I see no reason wby Sherlock Holmes shouldn't go on forever, as loog as there are sensibilities like Mr. Meyer's around to realize just how accommodating Cooan Doyle's creations really are.

Two Feisty Feminists Filming Hellman's 'Pentimento'

Vanessa Redgrave in "Julia"-"She has a stillness inside her," says her director.

By JUDITH WEINRAUB

LONDON anessa Redgrave is stalking the studio canteen, trying to get a young electrician to join the Workers Revolutionary Party. Jane Fooda is at a rally in Birmingham, urging a consumer boycott of California red grapes. .

Off the set, these two radical activists are engaged in their own political pursuits. On the set, where they are making a movie to be called "Julia," the politics of the 1970's have given way to a real life drama of the 1930's.

The film, an expensive ($8 million is rumored) and meticulously drawn production, is based on eo episode from "Pentimento," the best-selling 1975 autobiography of another politically committed woman, playwright Lillian Hellman, It is being directed by the veteran Fred Zinnemann, whom both actresses treat with respectful distance, and also stars Jason Robards (as Dashiel Hammett, Miss Hellman's companion of 30 years), Maximilian Schell and Hal

Like the Hellman narrative, the film deals with the friendship of two young women, Lillian (Jane Fooda) and Julia (Vanessa Redgrave), who grow up to-gether in New York but are separated when Julia goes first to college in England and theo moves to Vienna where she immerses herself in politicel activism.

The heart of the film is an adventure story: It focuses oo a dangerous jouroey made by Lillian to carry $50,000 of Julia's mooey into Nazi Germany to help refugees escape. Although the film is based on actual events. Zinnemann and the two stars insist there is no political statement or undertone to the film.

Ironically, what bas emerged is e film that will be radical in a very different way-a film about two women.

To be able to make this movie feels very, very good," said Jane Fonda, relaxing io her dressing room at EMI studios where the American and English scenes are being filmed. "When we started shooting, I kept thinking something's different, and then the full force of it hit me.

"It's about the relationship between two women. It's not neurotic or sexually aberraot," said the actress who was wearing a floor-length maroon sweat shirt and straw clogs, "it's just about two friends who care about each other tremendously, who are interested in each other's growth. There isn't any

"This is the first time I've played a part that isn't about game-playing, where I am thinking and caring about someone else. Women in movies have always been defined in terms of men, or they are victims. There is a kind of competition with any other woman who crosses their path."

Miss Fonda has been passionately involved with the movie since she first heard the story had been bought by 37-year-old producer Richard Roth three years ago.

"The fect is that it's about a woman who is a real beroine," said Miss Fonda emphatically clenching her fist. "It is very important to make movies about womeo who grow and become ideological human beings and totally committed people. We have to bagin to put that image into the mass culture."

Until the filming of "Julia" started in August, Miss Fonda had spent most of the last year and a balf pre-occupied with the senatorial bid made by her husband, Tom Haydon, in California. "Actors and actresses have a responsibility as a role model," she said. "I'll oever do a dishonest role again."

"It's something I wasn't aware of seven years ago. I didn't think of movies as having a social role. But films do a lot to create the superstructure of culture. Now 1 choose parts because they are about things I think should be said."

Judith Weinraub is a freelance based

Miss Fonda echoed the common complaint that it was difficult for an actress to find decent parts, "It's not just rhetoric. It's true. The only explanation is that the women's movement has made such a tremendous impact that it has become more difficult to use certain female stereotypes. The male ooes persist-the cowboy, the cop-but the glamour girl or the kind of characters I played before wouldn't bold up. "The old female roles have been done away with, but the financiers of movies -those men who run the multi-national corporations-can't figure out which new female stereotypes are bankable," she continoed. "The realities that confront most women haven't been proven [to appeal] at the box office, whether it's two female frieods, or a woman out looking for a job.

"What's nice about this story is that It is set within the context of an adventure story. Will Lillian succeed in smuggling the mooey into Germany? That kind of framework makes it much

'The fact is it's about a woman emphatically clenching her fist.'

There is a lot about Lillian Hellman l don't understand," she said as ber dresser helped her get ready for the scene. 'I don't really identify with her, but I came to care about her very much. She is a woman of many facets. I hadn't expected her bad temper and irritability. There is a lot of that io the script. I'm not thet way at all. That's been the hardest part.

"I was intimidated by the whole business until I decided I'm not playing Lillian Hellman. It would be folly for me to try to be her. I'm playing Lillian, the character.

While Miss Fonda was putting on oos of the dozens of wigs she wears in the film, which spans 40 years, Fred Zinnemann was meticulously lining up the sceee on Stage One. The setting is Small'a Paradise, a Harlem speakeasy in 1930. The barroom is heavy with red velvet and pink leather. There are mirrors and silver sparkles everywhere.

Miss Fonda and Mr. Glover sit patiently at e nightclub table, quietly runoing through their lines. The scene will end with her slapping his face. She fakes it. They start again. Zinnemann looks through the camera and moves it slightly to the left.

"Very good," he says softly. His instructions are precise. "Now, 1 think the table ought to be close enough for Joho to fail into the dancers when Jane hits him." The table is moved. Piece by piece the scene is assembled. The most American-looking actors are placed closest to the camera.

There are other American scenes in the film-the New York docks when Lillian sees Julia off to college and Sardi's after the successful opening of Lillian'a first play, "The Children's Hour." Zinnemann has asked for a group of American extras to be flown over, or to be rounded up from Americans living in London.

Zinnemann is a director who is known for bringing to life stories of personal courage. In a career that has included such classics as "High Noon," "From Here to Eternity," "A Member of the Wedding," and "A Man for All. Seasons," it is his first film since "The Day of the Jackal" in 1971. "Julia's life is the story of a woman committed to follow through on what she believes io," said Zinnemann, e short man whose contained physical presence radistes intelligence. "I was very moved by it and by the characters of the two women and their relation-

"There is a word in German, 'Zivilcourage," he said, "It is the courage of a civilian standing up to pressures infinitely greater than the individual. Perhaps cooscience is closest to it. That bas always fascinated me.

"The boxer in 'From Here to Eternity' is a good example. His is the story of the man who for his own reasons doesn't want to box. He had blinded a man. The army tries to break him down, but be sees it through to the bitter end."

For Zinnemann, the casting of a film is second in importance only to the script. He is pleased with the cast of "Julia" and the mood on the set: "As far as I can see everybody is getting aloog. Jane has the part well in hand, and she adores Vanessa. And we are very lucky to have Jason Robards. He has the roughness, the strength, the tenderness and bumor that are neces-

And what of Vanessa Redgrave, an actress whose political concerns almost seem to consume her physically when she is not on the set? "Vanessa is totally right," be said.

"In a curious way she is cast to type, which is something I don't usually like to do. The important thing for this part is that she has e stillness inside of ber. She has a quality that surpasses

'I doo't particularly like to tell actors what to do, though it varies with each actor and each part," he said. It is the next day and preparations have started for the sceoe where Julia is ettacked in her bed by a group of Nazis who have been instructed either to kidnap or kill her. The three attackers and four defenders appear oo the set and a half-hour is spent working out their placement.

Vanessa Redgrave appears, wearing a brown terrycloth robe over a white oightgown. Her hair has been washed so that it creates a halo-like effect in the back light of the shot. She looks through the camera, smiling.

As she waits for the final details of the scene to be worked out, she considers the character of Julia. "She is a girl who made cooscious political choices and broke with her class and her family to take a stand with the working class. She is very similar to the way I used to be e long time ago.
"I'm glad to do the part," she said, almost whispering.

"I love ecting," she continued intently. "I see no conflict between my acting and my political life, though I sometimes wish I could have more time for the letter:"

In Miss Redgrave's opinion, the character of Julie is the focus of the movie. "Lillian Hellman doesn't really tell you much about her. You only get to see glimpses," she said, bunching forward on the darkened set, just giving glimpses of herself as well.

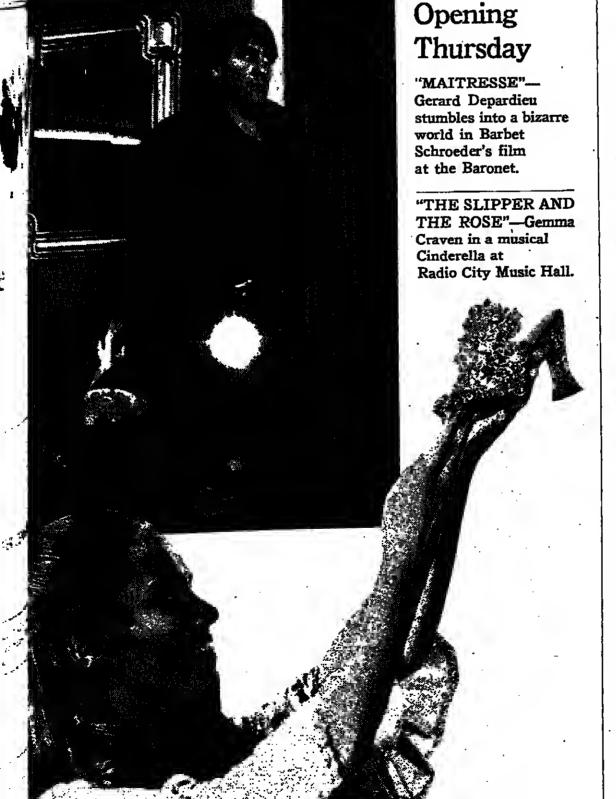

Julia is very much like the title of the book, she is an obscured character whom you can just catch through the varnish and the smoke, hut you only perceive outlines and cootours.

"The story is really about Lillian Heliman and how she felt about her friend. The film isn't really concerned with Julia, It excludes a great deal of what Julie was, what she said and did. There is a whole lot about ber you oever know. "I know," she continues, her blue eyes hrightening, "but that's neither here oor there."

Is it a political film? "Oh no. it is not remotely a political film," said Miss Redgrave flatly. "It is about the friendship between two women. It is oot ebout events. The question of why tens of thousands like Julia were defeated is not even dealt with."

And like the obscured, out-of-focus character of Julia, she drifted back onto the smoky set.

Pardon us for blowing

We wanted to be sure everyone knows that Harold C. Schonberg in the New York Times on October 10, 1976, said "It is no secret that the 14 pairs of concerts in this series make up one of the most treasured of New York musical institutions" and that its concerts are "splendidly prepared and handsomely delivered performances of the best in ghâmber musis" and a whole lot of other nice things. The opening concert of our eighth season today at 5:00 is sold out, but some tickets are available for many of the 27 other performances of "the musical success story of the generation." kar Berman: 'One If the Supreme ing Technicians'

-azar Berman, the newest of the international plano heroes, will give a Carnegie Hall concert on Wednesday. Until last year little was known about him except by word of mouth. Record collectors, however, knew something about his work. It must have been about 15 years ago lisks of the Liszt "Transcendental Etudes" came Soviet Union, to be snapped up by piano fanciers. ys the Russiana did not have a liaison with any cord company, and the disks coming out of the on were available only on import. Only one record iw York handled them, and not many copies were

Berman, of course, was the pianist oo the Liszt was not well served by his record company. The recorded sound was atrocious, with terrible incertortion, a tinny reproduction of the piano, and irface ooise to sandpaper the bookshelves of an y ry. But through all that came a kind of plano it reminded some of the young Horowitz, Berman way through the music with a powerhouse technunderstanding of the Liszt diablerie end an ability taut musical line. He promptly became a legend ectors.

and he remained. Pianist after pianist came out of t Lazar Berman, Never Lazar Bermao, In 1967 I o be lo Moscow, as part of a New York Times writing about the Soviet Union 50 years after the One afternoon I was talking with the director cow Conservatory. Are there any concerts in the e piano recital by Lazar Berman. There elso was a Davidovich. Davidovich I knew, again through e obviously was a fine, thoughtful skillful pianist. s lit up at the mention of Berman. That was one anted to hear.

rector's face fell. No, he said, you do not want man. Davidovich is much the better pianist. Bera technician. But I want to hear Berman, I said. said the director, Berman is playing only Liszt. Davidovich program, Bach, Beethoven, Chopio, . much more ioteresting, as a good musician uld be quick to realize. But I wont to hear Ber-Come, he said. I personally will take you to the appened that I ended up et both: at the first half dovich (and she played beautifully) to keep up et-American relations, and at the last half of the was apparent that the director of the conservawant me to hear Berman for a oumber of reaighth was that he actually seemed ushamed of n's playing was exhibitionistic, as far as he was concerned. It was not the kind of "musical" playing he waoted Soviet musicians to represent. He was afraid that I would get the wrong idea about Soviet pianism and musicianship from a Berman recital.

Anyway, Berman then played much the same as he played last year, and as he has been playing on the records he recently has been making. In some respects the director was correct. Berman is indeed a specialist. He plays no Chopio at all, and is basically a virtuoso throwback. From Schumann and Liszt through to Rachmaninoff, Scriabin and Prokofiev, he can be an amazing performer. He has played and recorded Beethoven, and It is a kind of Beethoven playing that raises the eyebrows of Western musicians. He had peculiar Ideas last year about Beethoven's E flat Sonata (Op. 31, No. 3), and it was neither an idiomatic nor a convincing performance.

But the Berman style is more complicated than that. Even in his chosen repertory he can do some peculiar things; and, one guesses, these are the result of certain psychological pressures that he bimself may not be aware of.

He produces a tine tone and is one of the supreme liv-Ing technicians. No matter how difficult the music, he makes it sound easy. Professionals respond to this kind of craft, and they attend his concerts with eyes popping out, much as they attend the concerts of his Western equivalent, Jorge Bolet. But Bolet too has some of the psychological pressures that Berman has. Namely: neither of those two pianists, gifted with such amazing fingers, wants to be recognized primarily as a technician. They want also to be recognized as thoughtful musicians. So in the playing a certain rather unsettling push and pull can be felt. The fingers want to do one thing; the mind orders them to do something else.

Much of this is manifest in tempos. Naturally Berman, with his technical equipment, can play any piece faster than anybody else if he wants to. But often he will deliberately slow down, just to demonstrate that be can be as "musical as anybody else. The effect is disconcerting, especially in passages that demand a kinetic push. Like Bolet, be can dawdle over lyric sections, determined to demonstrate his mastery over line and texture. It is precisely there that both pianists can break up, both musically and psychologically.

But in music where be is comfortable, Berman is a fearsome planist, and it is no wonder that he has taken over the West. Like Bolet (the two pianists have so much in common) he is capable of exquisite playing, of incredibly elegant playing, of the salon style raised to the oth degree. Nobody plays, for instance, the Schubert-Liszt transcriptions better than these two artists. Nobody except Vladimir Horowitz has so instinctive a feeling for the combination of daring, pianistic tightrope walking and-yes-aristocracy thet the big Liszt or Rachmaninnff pieces require.

Another thing working in Berman's favor-also his commercial favor, which is not unimportant to an artistis his stage projection. He is a bearded, hig, rather stout, shambling bear of a man, hut when he comes out and sits down, there are electrical transmissions between him and his audience. At least, this has been true in this country from his very first appearance et the Brooklyn Academy last year. But in Russia, ten years ago, the house was half

There is, however, a happy ending. Berman suddenly become a prophet in his own land. Not long ago he played in Moscow, which had been reading about his fabulous success in America. Everybody tried to get into the hall. It was packed. And more: the pianist received oot merely a polite reception but an overwhelming one. Was the director of the Moscow Conservatory on hand? One wonders.

"Berman is a fearsome pianist; it is no wonder he has taken over the West." (Harold C. Schonberg)

Fischer-Dieskau Wants to Record Everything By Everyone

By JOHN RUSSELL

y the end of the 1940's lt was common knowledge amoog people who cared about such things that the much-hettered city of Berlin bad produced a young surger or limitless potential. "There's oever been anything like it," said that great conductor Fritz Busch when he came back to England in 1951. "Such a voice, such an assured technique, such musicality, such a range of interests, such an imperious intelligence! And still in his twenties, It's phenomeoal. And such a terror of performing, too! You practically need e snowplow to push bim on to the stage."

People in other countries longed to hear this young singer, whose name took some getting used to. (When he first eppeared in London, even the popular, Fischer-Dieskau had only to open his mouth and sing to himself in the streets of Lucca for e friendly crowd to gather. High officers would whisk him out of the froot line to sing for them io their palaces io Bologna. ("I saluted. I stood to attection. I said 'Schubert: Erl King' or 'Schu-mann: Dicherliebe.' I sang. The general said: Dismissed. I went back to the froot line, where I spent e whole

himself night and morning with rancid butter.") As a prisoner of war he was in demand as singer, pianist, poetry reader, stage director, chorus master and conductor. ("It had its disadvantages. I was allowed to sleep late after a coccert, but the others reseoted that and used to turn a hose on my face whan it was time for them to get up.")

But Fischer-Dieskau oever had it in mind to be just a champion vocalist. He loves opera, and be has bad a great to change, just as great acting has to change, and that the great lieder-singers are landmarks in the history of human development.

It is because he knows this, and not because he collects the way other peopla collect stamps, that Fischer-Dieskau's house io Berlin has the look of a private museum in which everything relates to the bistory of his profession. Those who think of him as entirely serious may like to know that the guests' washroom is papered from floor to ceiling with the bad reviews which even he receives from time to time. No one who has an unmistakable personal style can be et the top of his profession for nearly 30 years and not make enemies.

It has been said of Fischer-Dieskan that sometimes be bullies, shoots and hectors. It has been said that he cannot leave well alone but goes on refining and nuancing with material that is best sung quite straight. (One English critic even used the words "high camp" in that context.) It has been said that no one who records quite so much can manifest throughout that ideal intensity of commitment which marked some of the lieder-singers of an older generatioo. It has been said that the rough traffic of the operatic stage does oot really suit him. There is quite enough of that sort of thing to save oo wallpaper in the smallest room in the Fischer-Dieskau is not gregarious, but when people do come to the house it amuses him very much to show them around. "Let's see, now. This desk was Mendelssohn's. The death mask oo the wall is of Liszt. That portrait is of Schiller, as you know. This is the anoouncement of Hugo Wolf's funeral. That drawing over there is of the original of Goethe's barpist in Wilhelm Meister.' As for the framed photographs, I lost count of them as loog ago as 1961. That is Eugen Gura, the baritooe who rediscovered Loewe's ballads. That is Theodor Reichmann, the first Amfortas in 'Parsifal.' That is Ludwig Hess, the baritooe who was a friend of Max Reger, That cabinet? It's full of all sorts of things-a letter from Verdi inviting some friends to 'Fidelio, a cadenza written out for Turgenev's great love, the soprano Pauline Viardot, a school report oo the tenor Leo Slezak when he was a boy. . . . "

He has never forgotteo what his said to him: that in singing the entire human being is committed, and not just the voice. He inherited that same convictioo from his father, who was a well-known headmaster in Berlin and eventually had a street camed after him, and from his mother, whose limpid and unaccented English was a joy to listen to. "My father was a many-sided man. He wrote a novel, he designed a new form of desk which was taken up io schools all over Germany, he was the first headmaster to introduce a cinema projector ioto his school: He was always at odds with authority. At the time of the inflation, when everyone else got got scared, he organized subscription concerts with first-rate artists. He never ran out of ideas.

"We were always Prussians. You must remember that Prussia didn't elways have the kind name It has oow. My family were more military than musical. One of them invented a oew trajectory for the artillery in the time of Frederick the Great. My grandmother was on nickname terms with Field-Marshall Moltke. After World War H. wheo I appeared in Alban Berg's 'Wozzeck,' my own sympathies were more with the enlisted man. Dieskau, by the wey, was the name of a little castle somewhere hetween Leipzig and Halle. We sold it in the IE70's or thereabouts, and oow it's e school for the Volkspolizei, but I like to remember that J.S. Bach used to stay in it and wrote some.

of his cantatas there." So Fischer-Dieskau's career has a double history. There is the history of the voice itself, which in the late 1940's appeared as a phenomenon of nature which hes been coaxed by sustained effort and high intelligence into a phenomenon of art. With that voice, and closely guarded manuscripts in Universal's possession for two weeks. He initiated a public controversy, questioning Universal's repression of the material and arguing that it would be relatively simple to complete the opera. According to Dr. Perle, Berg had completed the orchestration of roughly three-fifths of the final act, and the "short score" of the remainder "is not in any sense a 'sketch,'" but contains precise indications of what the composer in-tended. There were, he added, two small gaps, but they could be easily filled in and, possibly, existed in the uncatalogued portion of Berg's estate.

"Lulu" is based on two works by Frank Wedekind, the expressionist playwright, and is the story of an archetypally sexual woman who innocently triggers e phantasmagoria of emotion and violence in the men-and women around her. Dr. Perle argues that not only does the third act work out Berg's musical intentions, but that it casts new light on Lulu's character.

She can be mistaken as cold-hearted and even a bit silly in the often farcical first part of the opera-especially when played with cheap exaggeration as is often the case in current productions. The third act deepens our appreciation of ber innocence. As Dr. Perle put it in a letter to Robert Craft in 1963: "In the concluding scene she has become dear to one in the way that Desdemona is in Act IV of 'Otello'. . . The scene has e pathos beyond anything that I know in opera. . .

In withholding the third act, Univer-sal adduced various "expert opinions." Dr. Perle and others challenged the decision vigorously on scholarly, musical and moral grounds. Now, however, even Universal admits that it acted only because of the wishes of the composer's widow.

Wheo he gave Schubert's "Schöne Müllerin" in London in Jaouary 1952, at the age of 26, the posters carried an endorsement by an English critic not given to hyperbole: "The Greatest Living Lieder Singer," it said.

The ball sold out. The house was in state of un-English ebullition. The lights dimmed. An unmistakable stamping tread was beard advancing from the wings, and there before us was the forthright young giant whose name has ever since sold out the great concert halls of the world. (If you doo't have your tickets for his concerts et Carnegie Hall this Friday and Nov. 11, Fischer-Dieskau had then, has now, and is likely to continue to have a most remarkable history. After four years in the German army (the last two of them spent as a prisoner of the Americans in Italy) he got back to Berlin in the summer of 1947 without a penny in his pocket. He was just 22 years old. Virtually oothing was left of his home. His widowed mother could barely make ends meet. He had not had a singing lesson since the spring of 1943. Berlin was a mess, the like of which we must hope never to see. Yet he stood by an entry in his wartime diary. It was dated from the eastern front in June 1944; "If only I can stay alive, I have a golden future." There was nothing rhetorical about that "If only ..." When the Ameri-cans overran the post which he had belied to man for mooth after misereble mooth in the footbills of the Apennines he was the only German survivor. But to be so confident of his "golden future" at the age of 18! And to achieve it so rapidly, so completely, and with never a mistaken step! That is the remarkable thing.

Talent helped, of course, Even when German soldiers in Italy were cooe too deal to contribute to it (most recently, and after many years of self-questiooing, as Hans Sachs in 'Die Meistersinger"). But he sees lieder-singing as one of the highest, subtlest and most complex forms of human expression. The lieder-singer has to make us aware as never before of poems which we may have read or heard a hundred times over. He has to make us aware of a musical structure which, in the case of Schubert, Schumann or Hugo Wolf, is likely to be as dense, and as concise, as anything in the eotire repertory of western music.

The great lieder-composers can epitomize in two minutes what would take a novelist 300 pages, and take a playwright a whole evening, to set before us. Each generation bas to re-define this experience for itself. Fischer-Dieskau as a very young man knew instinctively, just as he knew it as e fact of history, that great singing has t has been said of Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau that when Dietrich is in London giving a song recital, Fischer is in Berlin singing in an opera and Dieskau is in the studios making records. Possibly in all history has there never been a busier singer. And no musician in history has made more records.

Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau has been keeping up this pace for some 20 years. That proves several things. He is a good vocal technician or his voice would have vanished by now. He is a fast study, able to learn music with unparalleled speed. He is a protean mu-

Nobody cao put up much of an argument against his preeminence as a lieder-singer. There have been some criticisms about the lack of sensuosity in his voice, which in all truth is a good sturdy baritone without very much color. But there are no criticisms about his ability to dig into a song and extract the musical essence.

He has achieved the ideal set by Thomas Campion almost 400 years ago of coupling words and notes lovingly together. Such is the prohing nature of Fischer - Dieskau'a interpretations that he could probably sing his lieder with virtually no voice et all. Fortuoetely Fischer-Dieskau has managed to retain, to a surprisingly large extent, the kind of voice he had as a young man. He undoubtedly will be around for another 15 years or so, secure in his ability to mesmerize audiences with his favorite literature—the songs of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and Wolf.

BRAVO!

The Met Box Office has your tickets to civilization.

There's nothing like a night at The Met. And no two of them are quite the same - from a stirring Meistersinger to a sublime Figure to The Met's own three-opera opera, Puccini's Il Trittico. You can even choose to see an incredible new opera that has never before been performed in this country.

For on November 21, Einstein on the Beach, the unique new work by Robert Wilson and Philip Glass, will have its American premiere at The Met. Le Monde called it "A triumph," Le Figaro called it "A fascinating experience," L'Express called it "Bewitching" and The New York Times called it "An astonishing modern-day mystery play."

The remaining tickets for all Met performances through December 11 – including the $4-to-$15 tickets for the one-time-only performance of Einstein on the Beach—are on sale at The Met Box Office today.

The Box Office is open Sundays from noon to 6 and any other day from 10 to 8. If you prefer to reserve your tickets with any major credit card, simply call 580-9830—any day but Sunday.

And if you're interested in complete details on casts and performances at The Met between December 13th and February 12th-along with a form that allows you to order your tickets by mail-send a stamped, selfaddressed, business-size envelope to Mail Order. Metropolitan Opera. Lincoln Center, New York, N.Y. 10023.

with her dead husband, who told her that it was his wish that "Lulu" remain io its two-act form. Berg's music, and especially his large scale works, fell into neglect in Europe after the Anschluss and during and immediately after World War II. But with the revival of (the two-act) "Lulu" in 1949, opera houses have expressed a steady interest in the third act, but circle have suggested that Mrs. Berg either knew of or suspected liaisons between her husband and other women, and that "Lulu" became for her a refrom Universal or Mrs. Berg. In the past two months, "several" opera houses have contacted Universal again, according to Stefan G. Hampner, one of the firm's directors. Among them are the Paris Opéra, the Metropolitan Opera and the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden. Whether the conservative Vienna State Opera in the composer's home town is among the bidders is less clear, but the answer seems to be that it is. "The devious methods of expression of any opera director in Vien-na would not make it possible for him to express any such desire directly," was the way Mr. Harpner put it. "But, yes, I would say so."

Mr. Harpner confirmed the existence of the scores in Universal's possession, and added tantalizingly that there were a oumber of "other manuscripts" in Mrs. Berg's apartment that hadn't yet been examined or catalogued. He deried persistent rumors that Pierre Boulez, himself published by Universal, had already completed the third act. According to one report in the past few weeks, a person was ushered into a back room at Universal, a safe was unlocked and the person was allowed to hold Mr. Boulez's fioished version of the act-but not to study it.

Mr. Boulez says that he was allowed to examine Berg's materials four or five years ago, but flatly deoies having completed the final act,

Mr. Harpner added that it was Universal's intention to allow one author-ized person to complete an "official" version of the three-act opera. But he also said that the materials would be made available to qualified scholars. Universal Edition has always adopted an open policy," he said.

Mr. Harpner stressed that any final decision as to the third act would have to wait until the probation of Mrs. Berg's will. "Mrs. Berg is hardly cold in her grave," he said. "Although our legal procedures are simpler than yours, it will still take some time." Mr. Harpner said the probationary period would be "not very long." But Anthony A. Bliss, executive director of the Met. reports that Universal has now informed the Met that the third act won't be available until 1979, and that "someone else" has a prior claim to first performance rights.

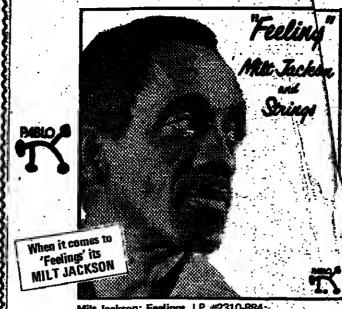

At the moment it would appear that that "someone else" is the Paris Opéra in the persons of Mr. Boulez and Rolf Liebermann, its general director, Mr. Boulez says that he will be meeting with Universal in Vienna in December to discuss the matter. Mr. Liebermann is also a composer, published by Uoi-versal, and he has been cooperating with Mr. Boulez on his project for over 20 years. "I think the first time we ap-proached Mrs. Berg was in 1955 or 1956, when I was director of the Norddeutscher Rundfunk," Mr. Liebermann recalled recently from Washington. Otherwise, Mr. Liebermann remained guarded on the aubject of "Lulu."

Paul Findalay, assistant to John Tooley, the general administrator of Covent Garden, seemed rather put off by the notion of a "race" among the various opera companies, Mr. Bliss, however. said flatly that "there's a race between [James] Levine, Liebermann and Tooley." Despite Universal's appar-eot refusal to consider the Met before 1979, Met officials said that negotiations were still "at a very, very delicate stage," and held open the possibility of presenting the final act for this seasoo's premiere.

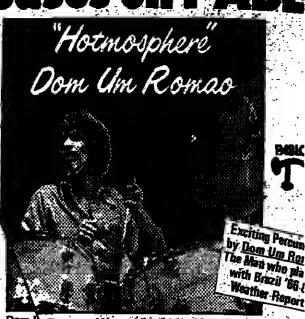

"We're perfectly prepared: a) to finish it; b) to copy it; and c) to teach it to our principals," said Mr. Levine. the Met's music director and conductor of its forthcoming "Lulu." "But we would have to get it within the next month in order to have time. After Mrs. Berg's death we sent a telegram to Universal saying, 'As fast as we can have it, we want it." Mr. Levine added that he would be willing to complete the act himself, with the cooperation of

"It just so happens that we are the next company to do a production," Mr. Levine sald, "If we don't get the third act, we'll present the complete opera when we can. Doing it means much more than being the first to have done

ART MAILBAG

Defending 'The Natural Paradise' At the Modern

To the Editor:

It was not only disagreeable, but also puzzling to read Hiltoo Kramer's opinion in "A Great Show on a False Peg" (Oct. 10, 1976) that my attempts to suggest visual and emotional cootinuities between Romantic landscape painting and Abstract Expressionism were "sheer hokum." From his own writings, I would have guessed him to be more generous. Concluding an essay on Henry Moore in The Times (April 26, 1970), he could state: "Moore is, then, a Romantio-and a very Enghish Romantic at that. He is the true heir to the great 19th-century landscape painters." And writing about Helen Frankenthaler (March 2, 1969), he could find affinities between her abstract painting and the early 20th-century landscapes of Marin, Dove, and O'Keeffe. Apparently he is far more tolerant of his own free-wheeling ininto connections between Romantic landscape and modern art than he is of the Museum of Modern Art's demonstration of his point or of my own long-term efforts, in a book and two essays, to trace exactly those art-historical currents which would support his published apercus.

The problem, I suspect, has to do with Mr. Kramer's often expressed antagonism toward those major Abstract Expressionists Pollock, Rothko, Still, Newman who hring the Modern's American landscape survey to a resounding finale. If he still dislikes these artists as much as he used to, no wonder he cannot respood to the idea that they may be heirs to, among other traditions, that of Romantic landscape. It would seem that for Mr. Kramer this honor should be reserved only for artists he likes, such as Moore and Frankenthaler. The former being Britsh and a sculptor, the latter being too young, they also had both to be excluded from the exhibition.

ROBERT ROSENBLUM Professor of Fine Arts New York University New York City

To the Editor:

One has grown so accustomed to the offhand irresponsibilities of the Sunday Timescritic, that his article should have caused no shock. Indeed, a particularly well-informed friend suggested that it conceivably might be a parody, a pre-Halloween trick-but-no-treat. Alas, Monday afterthoughts eliminated even that possibility. It is preposterous to write off the Whitney exhibit of the "pleasant, placid" Rockefeller collec-tion as one that "will infloence nobody's thinking about anything." It is disgusting to read lower down the ad hominem attack upon Robert Rosenblum over his catalogue essay written for the Museum of Modern Art show "The Natural Paradise," as well as some earlier writings.

It is possible to entertain honest critical differences with Professor Rosenblum's original and controversial thesis (I find it largely convincing myself), but it is both arrogant and silly to thrice dismiss it as hokum. Worse, the Timescritic's diatribe goes entirely unsubstantiated. Still worse, his credentials, based upon past critical performance, concerning painting of the last two decades, are vulnerable to say the least. Indeed, I suspect he has as much difficulty discerning the painterly qualities of a Bierstadt or Church as he does the pictorial qualities of e Still or Newman.

JOHN JACOBUS Professor of Art Dartmouth College

Mr. Kramer replies: The "problem," as Professor Rosenblum calls it, has

Fischer-Dieskau Wants to Record Everything

with a following which grows more merous every year, Fischer-Dieskau could have settled for what came to him most easily and for what his audiences most wanted to hear.

But he didn't, as we all know. Where earlier singers chose ten or eleven songs hy Schubert and stayed with them, Fischer-Dieskau recorded 408. He will not be satisfied until he was recorded everything by everyone: all Schubert, all Schumann, all Beethoven, all Hugo Wolf, all Brahms, all Richard Strauss. "And don't think I've finished," be said a year or two ago. "Remember there's all Pfitzner, all Mendelssohn, all Meyerbeer, all Liszt, all Peter Cornelius, all Ives . . . " (He had Ives's songs in his workroom long before most Americans so much as knew Ives by name.)

What drives him is a sense of music as something that is there to be reinterpreted. But so is the concert-formula.

Fischer-Dieskau has programmed for next Friday evening in Carnegie Hall. Brahms knew Stockhausen's voice through and through, and in those songs we can hear exactly how he sang, relying more on musicality and depth of feeling than on weight of

To find a living composer who would write for him as inventively as Brahms wrote for Stockhausen is a dream that Fischer-Dieskau has pursued with a selfless and largely unrewarded gener-osity, as if it lay with him to save lieder-singing (and for that matter opera as well) from the status of an antiquarian activity. No matter how strenuous, thankless or finally un-vocal the score may have turned out to be, he has never gone back on a promise. And the phonograph keeps most of these adventures on ice, even if there are few who care to defrost them.

Fischer-Dieskau was 50 last year: an occasion to which he gave a character-istically low profile. He has as many plans as ever. "To be precise, I have one plan fewer than last year, in that much as I love conducting I have decid-

'Fischer-Dieskau can take a melodious nothing by that redoubtable bluestocking, Bettina von Arnim. and make an audience hold its breath at the beauty of his declamation.'

Even as a prisoner of war he despised the pot-pourri. A concert for him is a department of the history of ideas. In this, his great predecessor was his fellow-baritone Johannes Messchaert (1857-1922), who built each of his programs around a specific idea. To stay with one composer for a whole evening is to make of the concert what the English oovelist Henry Green called "a long intimacy between strangers"; continuity and concentration go together. In the case of a singer like himself, who could have excelled in the spoken theater, a great poet can equally well bind the evening together. When Goethe is in question, for instance, Fischer-Dieskau can take a melodious nothing hy that most redoubtable of hlue-stockings, Bettina von Arnim, and make a huge audience hold its breath at the beauty of his declamation.

Concert managements dread new music. But Fischer-Dieskau has not forgotten how long it took Michael Vogl, the foremost singer of Schubert's day, to consect to look at Schubert's songs. He also identifies very strongly with Julius Stockhausen (1826-1906), the Alsatian baritone to whom Brahms dedi-cated the "Magelonenlieder" which ed to give it up. Two careers are one too many, to begin with, and also my 22-year-old son Matthias wants to conduct. He has made a very good beginning, both with the orchestra which he started himself—they specialize in chamber opera—and as chief conductor of the new Youth Orchestra which UNESCO has founded in Berlin.

"I have just built a new house on the Starnbergersee, near Munich, and in a few years' time I hope to hold regular master classes there. In the fall of 1977 I shall make a short tour of the U.S.S.R. with Svistoslav Richter, I look forward to doing 'Bluebeard's Castie' with Julia Verady, I've just recorded Schumann's 'Genoveva' in Leipzig, and in 1978 I shall appear as King Lear in a new opera by Aribert Rei-mann. Oh, and one last thing. I have a studio in my new house, and I enjoy painting more than ever, so I won't promise not to have a little exhibition

And so it is that at an age when many a very good singer is being politely encouraged to step down, Die-trich Fischer-Dieskau still has before him what he foresaw for himself in nothing whatever to do with my assess ment of the quality of the paintings produced by Pollock, Rothko, Still and Newman, but everything to do with the character of these paintings. And their character is such that they cannot be said to exist in a "tradition" that ties them to the paintings of Bierstadt, Church, et. al. It is not a matter of conferring "honors " on artists one admires; it is a matter of seeing what they have done in their work, and oot imposing fanciful theories and imaginary "traditions" oo it.

To suggest that Henry Moore is a certain kind of English Romantic or that there are certain affinities between Helen Frankenthaler's paintings and those of Georgia O'Keeffe and her con-. temporaries is not at all the same thing as saying that there is a "tradition" et work that binds them into e significant esthetic and metaphysical relationship. It is Professor Rosenblum's promiscuous use of the word—and the concept of-"tradition" that reduces his theory to bokum. There are many ways to define a tradition, hut however one defines it, it has to consist of something more than a vague, wholly hidden, completely non-visual suspicion of plausible parallels or resemblances. From one of our leading art historians one has a right to expect a more sober understanding of what, for serious artists, a real tradition signifies.

As for Professor Jacobus, he is mis taken in thinking that my criticism of Professor Rosenblum's ideas constituted an ad hominem attack, though he is not above making such an attack on me, I notice. I have long regarded Professor Rosenblum as a gifted and serious writer on art, and I have said as much on this page—most recently, in connection with the "Age of Revolution" exhibition of French painting, Indeed, I take him seriously enough to register my dismay when he wanders, as he did on this occasion, ioto the

The Joffrey Ballet Shows Its American Side

Given these projects, a Joffrey season such as the current one-without its usual productions of such European classics as "Parade" of "The Green Table"-gives only an incomplete picture of where the company stands today and Yet, at the same time, loffrey made some remarks that gives the all-American season a new context. Joffrey's hope is to include in the future ballets from 1938 that would make up an Americana wing: Ruth Page's and Bentley Stone's "Frankie and Johnny"; Lew Christensen's "Filling Station" and Eugene Loring's "Billy the Kid," for example.

At the other end of the spectrum, he also envisages his dancers working with young American modern-dance choreographers, such as Sara Rudner, Lar Lubovitch and

From this perspective, the current season doesn't appear so one-sided. By the end, it will have included the company premiere of Agnes de Mille's 1942 "Rodeo," an Americana revival, and a new work by a popular modern-dance chore-ographer, Twyla Tharp. This range constitutes a variety the season, even within its deliberately set confines.

Joffrey has done so rething very shrewd. He took ballets that outlived their usefulness and gave them a needed rest of several years. Now he has brought them back as novelties. Essentially, he has offered a retrospective of early Joffrey signature pieces. There is no way of saying, for example, that Joffrey's own 1967 rock ballet "Astarte" is as dated as slang when it is being presented overtly as an artifact of the past psychedelic era.

On the other hand, "Olympics," created in 1964 by.
Gerald Arpino, now looks unsophisticated. One problem is that one of its sections consists entirely of classroom exercises from Martha Graham's technique, but these exercises have been theatricalized with greater éclat by Graham self recently. Another problem is that Arpino himse other ballets, has given a more complex treatment to relatively simple male duets that were once the novel

By contrast, Arpino's 1362 "Sea Shadow," has c benefited from its furlough from the repertory. This love duet for a boy lounging bo a beach, who swim into the infinite with his nymph, is very much the of romantic fantasy that is coming back into favor. Ar fantasy-ballets have not always been that gentle; in hus," a girl went mad; in "Nightwings," the hapless was attacked by birds.

Winged creatures again affack the hero in An newest ballet, a highly theatrical treatment of the Or myth entitled "Orpheus Times Light." It is one of An harsh, as opposed to pretty, ballets. Yet its virtue F its dramatic impact stemming from Arpino's ability to dense his story into three symbolic duets for Orpheus an usually effective living fresco of the souls in hell hallet's appeal is a question of taste. Its accent on duets puts it on the same wave length as Arpino's e "The Relativity of Icarus." Yet if Eurydice gets lost i shuffle. Arpino's view of Orpheus has its own dime Arpino seems to see him as a romantic hero who must come personal tests, or trials, before he is to attain in tality as the archetypal artist.

Our last glimpse of Orpheus is an apotheosis. The i in its use of streamers, is reminiscent of the momen closed Norman Walker's "Medea" for Emily Franker, this season. This scene shows Orpheus transformir bonds into a lyre and then into an Apollonic frie sun rays that follow him op, presumably, to the he As the success of the moment, "Orpheus Times Light conceivably show up in a retrospective of the Jo ed Minister of Culture, she said, some-what ingenuously it was thought: "Cul-ture is what unites all Frenchmen." Well, not quite. But what certainly makes culture work is government sup-port. And this kind of support can be seen clearly in the funding that Rolf Liebermann has acquired for the Paris Opera. He arrived in January 1973 from Hamburg. This Swiss-born intendent is generally regarded as the most brilliant man in the field of opera presentation. He now has a budget equal to $25 mil-lion a year. Four million dollars of that budget comes in from the box-office. The other $21 million is provided by the French government, Jacques Chirac, the former Prime Minister of France, guaranteed that this support would continue until the end of Liebermaon's contract with the Opéra in 1980. The grant is also subject to increases to compensate for inflation-a serious concern in Paris. So the subsidy will, at least until 1980, remain at the same level, whatever happeos to the French franc and the French economy. Compare this with the $12.7 million that Anthony A. Bliss, the executive director of New York's Metropolitan Opera House, is having to raise to balance his budget. It is, as you can see, a much smaller budget.

In about three years, Liebermann has turned around the Paris Opéra from being virtually the laughing stock of the operatic world to being one of the the operatic world to being one of the greatest opera companies anywhere. After all, it needed only money and taste. The money Liebermann demanded; the taste he had. Now he, and his lieutenant, Hughes Gall, are moving toward the development of the Paris Opera Ballet, a group of splendid dancers in search of a repertory. They now have a good teacher, Raymond Franchetti, at the head of the school, and they have recently appointed the Franco-American ballerina Violette Verdy as the director of the company. Verdy as the director of the company. She will make even more close the company's connection with George Balanchine—Liebermann and Balanchine are old friends and should presumably not only bring French dance into the 20th century, but also create a new tradition at the Paris

Then there is, of course, the controversial Pompidou Museum, which opens officially in January of next year. The museum, which looks a little like a transparent birdcage, has been designed by an Italian/British group, headed by Renzo Piano and Richard. Rogers, who got the contract at the end of 1974 after a competition that had more than 600 entries.

The idea has been, in the view of the museum's director Pontus Rulten, "to provide transparent architecture in contrast to the old temples." The structure will house not only the visual arts -and in this respect it is aiming to have an important modern American collection-but will also embrace music and a public library, which oddly enough has been hitherto unknown in

How much this is going to stimulate French culture is difficult to assess. Many Parisians do not like the building, but, in my experience, people generally, and particularly journalists, do not like anything that is new. With increasing impetus since World War II, New York has been the world center of the visual arts, and the development of a Pompidou Museum is not going to make a radical change. But it is going to make a difference. It is going to provide a focus for the French artist, it will stimulate dealers, it will promote the entire Parisian art world. And this was not a world I thought was very active.

Over the Channel to London, Here, too, things are happening. For one thing, buildings are happening. If Paris is getting its Pompidou Museum of Modern Art, London is getting its new, and certainly equally controversial, National Theater. The structure has been designed by Denys Lasdun and, in London, it's bad news. But this is a misconception, for the National is an extraordinary theater, with three ideally designed auditoriums—a proscenium arch theater, the most sophisticated theaterin-the-round the world has ever seen, and finally one of those particularly empty, but fillable, spaces that oowa-days is the ultimate aim of every theater director. It is a beautiful building. It looks somewhat brutal from the outside, but as a theater it looks as though it will function.

In London the pound is sinking, to adapt an image from John Dos Passos, like rose-leaves falling down the Grand Canyon. Yet people are remarkably cheerful. Perhaps they do not under-stand what is happening to them economically. Perhaps, even, it doesn't matter. The theater scene generally was poor this year-but so was it in Paris. And in both countries it will probably be better next year. The Tate Gallery in London (roughly the equivalent of our Museum of Modern Art) has one of the best acquisition budgets in the world, and the major orchestras in London-there are six of them!seem to be excellent.

The curious thing in looking at these three cities is that New York should be the most ebuilient, and yet, at least just at present, it is not. Paris is on. its usual inflationary bend, and Lon-don is declining with a gentle fiscal fail; yet both of them seem more active in the arts than New York. Not more innovative, more creative or more inventive, but simply more active. As indicated earlier, Rolf Liebermann at the Paris Opéra has more freedom than Anthony Bliss at the Metropolitan. And this is only one instance, Peter Hall, of Britain's National Theater, has more money and scope than Joseph Papp and his New York Shakespeare Festival has, and certainly infinitely more than Theodore Mann at the Circle in the

I am reminded of the story Bernard Shaw used to tell about his relationship with the producer/director Gabriel Pascal, who made the cinematic versions of quite a number of his plays. Shaw said: "No, we don't get on that well, because Pascal is interested only in art, and I am interested only in money." Shaw's instincts were absolutely right.

The vitality of New York still makes it the Big Apple in the world of art. Of course, we have lost most of our film and televisioo business to Los Angeles, which does have an adverse effect upon our theatrical life, becauseunlike in Paris or London where all the acting arts are centralized—there is a continual talent drain to the Coast. Yet, in terms of every art form one might name, New York is still creatively more or less at the top of the heap. Nevertheless, we really have to consider bow long this can continue. It does seem to me that London and

We have hardly any concept of how much London and Paris spend on their arts institutions.'

Paris are both more somberly and sensibly concerned with the arts, particularly with the performing arts.

Our problem not just here in New York but throughout America is a lack of seriousness at all levels of government in facing the matter of arts subsidies. As a nation, in this field, we are simply a disgrace, and the most casual glance at Paris and London is sufficient to illustrate this all too evident fact. Indeed, we do not even need to go as far as Paris or London-just look at Montreal or Toronto, The Canadian government is markedly more generous with its cultural buck than is

Let us not mock or knock entirely the subsidy pattern of the United States, Oddly enough the pattern—if not the substance—is actually far preferable to that found in either Britain or France. In Europe, funding for the arts tends to be monolithic. For example, Britain enjoys, and rightly so, the Arts Council of Great Britain. This is a complex and worthy organization. It depends on the advice of unpaid experts working together in panels and. just as with our own National Endowment for the Arts, there has never been the faintest suggestion of political pres-sure. Yet, whereas in the United States we have a varied system of subsidy, most of the money available in Britain is totally dependent upon the Arts Council, which is the appointee of the central government. The same situation pertains in France, where the Minister of Culture, together with such advisers as he or, now, she appoints, has absolute power that only needs to be rubber-stamped by the Assembly.

In the United States, we have at least planned our subsidies with greater so-phistication, although very possibly, even very probably, that sophistication was the child of chance rather than design. Be that as it may, here we do enjoy a multi-layered system of arts subsidies—we have federal subsidies. state subsidies, municipal subsidies, foundation subsidies, and even, if we are lucky, business and private patronage. This is a very fine and balanced system. There is only one snag. Although the money it produces is beautifully distributed, there is not enough

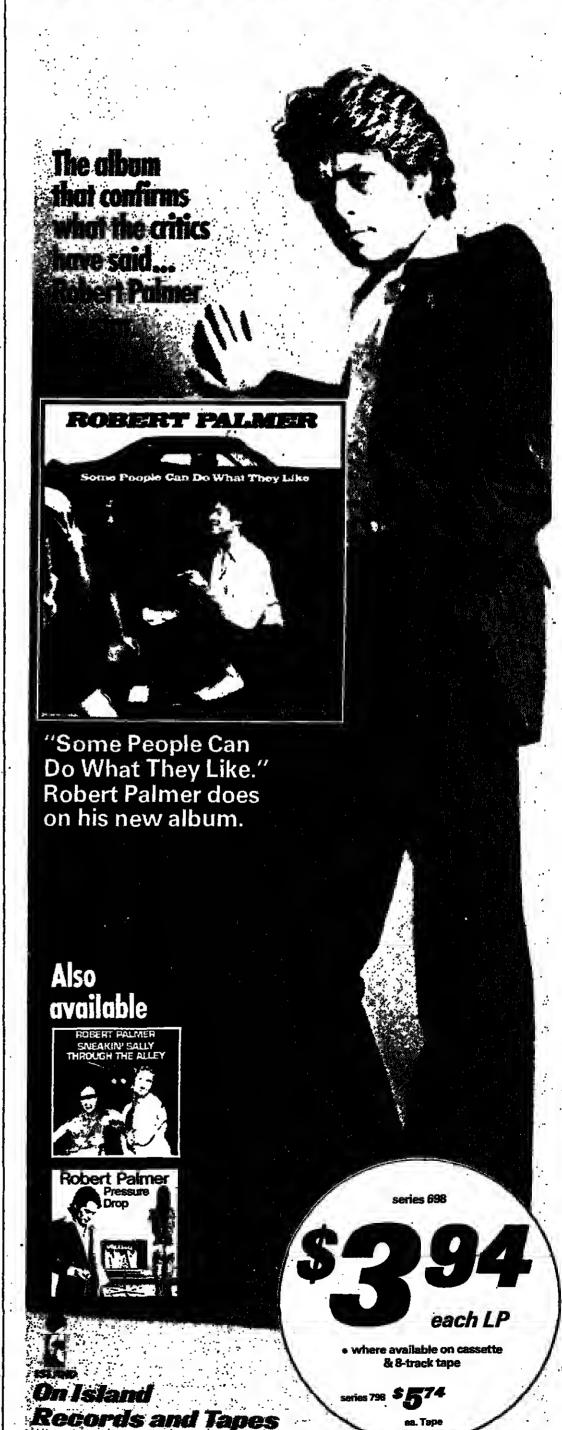

We have hardly any concept of the amount of money London and Paris expend on their arts institutions. Of course, all such institutions plead poverty. Of course, they are all accused of overspending. (Peter Hall, director of Britain's National Theater, has been savagely and even more ludicrously attacked in the yellower pages of the British press). But in New York, our arts institutions are still wandering around searching for a buck. If Peter Hall is guilty of over-spending, and he quite clearly is not, what are Joseph Papp or Anthony Bliss or Lincoln Kirstein or Thomas Hoving, or whoever, guilty of? Under-financing. The fact is they do their best, but everyone else who ought to be supporting them must do better. And I mean the Federal government and right down the line.

If one happens to be interested in the arts, New York is the happiest city in the world to live in. But New York is, I believe, in imminent jeopardy. This could be a tragedy for our city. We must be a city of light, and we must be given the money to switch on the

The Paris Opera has a budget of $25 million. At the Metropolitan Opera House, which is no small operation, Anthony Bliss is struggling to produce on a budget of about helf of that figure. The story is right there—and it is a Part of the interpretation lies in the structure, and I enjoy dividing that white, unsulfied canvas according to the composition that best interprets the persoo, Usually place everything when I start by drawing on the canvas in thin blue or black paint directly from the model. For me, drawing is the great discipline of art, but I've been painting so long I do not thick consciously of techniqua and I do not believe one should concentrate on technique. I feel the art in my work is the way I do it, an ongoing thing that bappens while I work.

Memory plays a large part in painting people. Some people are so mercurial that one has to remember the original concept. One three-quarter length portrait of a mao I actually saw two years before I painted lt. It was painted in my bead before I did it.

As one works, a profounder conception often develops, so that sometimes I have painted two canvases of the same person. For instance, I ooce painted a very romantic, falconlike profile of the late poet Frank O'Hara. Beside him was a table with lilacs. He came to sit four or five times but the last time he looked much more "beat" than the romantic image I'd

For nearly 10 yeers I have coocerned myself exclusively with the portrait. I do not do commissioned portraits. I paint my friends --- rather than anooymous people-who are kind eoough "leod" me their image, which when photographed under particular light conditions, at a specific moment, becomes the "situation" from which to make a peioting. I then try to effect a translation from the photograph to the painting. I find I am interested in a kiod of "invention of means" rather than invention as we have come to think of it in art. Instead of inveoting shapes, color combinations or interesting edges, I accept the shapes, colors and edges in the pho-tograph. I know what the painting will look like-at least io terms of its iconograpby-but I do not koow bow

I will make it. I am intarested in the richoess and complexity of the portrait head (the skin, pores, individual hairs, reflections all presented in a high degree of detail) coupled with an equally extreme attitude-of economy and simplicity in the working methods. I want the least amount of physicality between the viawer and the painting. I always try to use the least amount of paint necessary to make an image. In the black and white paint-

But of course, every square inch is different because of what each dot, in relation to the other dots eround it, represents. That the dots ultimately stack up to make a portrait bead keeps the painting, I hope, from simply being an interesting display of "art

'The Process Is My Goal'

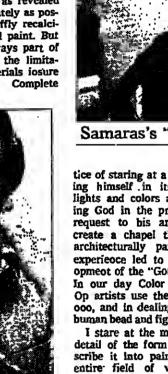

By PHILIP PEARLSTEIN

My basic concerns are derived from abstraction. I grows out of my attempt to re-create the fall of light over the actual forms in front of me, and I ignore the now outdated modernist credo of the flatness of the picture plane. At oo time do I bring traditional "correct" academic procedures into play. I am not even sure of what those would be. I develop the whole image as faithfully es possible, without expression, without editorializing, without fancy brushwork. Everything is limited by the lighting, walls and other conditions of my studio.

Around 1960, I turned away from emotionally-charged expressionism. At that time the nude human figura as a constellation of still-life forma became my usual subject; previously it had been landscape. I extended this attitude into portraiture early, at first portraits of friends and my children, and than occasional commissioned portraits.

My development of the painting is always the cloning process-reproducing the image detail by detail. I recreate the forms as revealed by light as accurately as possible with the stiffly recalcitrant brushes and paint. But frustratioo is always part of my plan and so the limitations of the materials iosure constant failure. Complete

stract realism. I emphasize two-dimensional design ideas: the reduction of three-dimensional forms in space to twoimensional areas with cleanly delineated edges. The placement of the major forms of the figure on the canvas determines the picture structure. The forms, textures and colors are predicated by my visual experience of the persoo in front of me. Each brushmark I make is motivated by that visual experi-

The illusion of threedimensional forms in space verisimilitude seems always beyond my ability. But success at verisimilitude is not my goal. It is the process, my experience during the attempt to achieve the likeness, that is my purpose. For me the process is an intensely interior experience, a non-verbal experience of feeling rather than of analysis. It is a kind of high.

Part of the experiencing of works of esthetic value involves mesmerizatioo, selfinduced by staring et the object, allowing the ocular nerves to relax from their ordinary analytical viewing. Tuning the world out, an emptying of one's mind. The most familiar result of this in regard to painting is the experience of color afterimages. One stares et. say, a red circle on a white field and soon its opposite on the hue, value and intensity scales, i.e., a pale bright green circle drifts up and separates itself from the red. Mystic and spiritual values have been attached to the experience, as witness the Navajo "Eye Dazzler" patterned blankets used in the peyote ceremooies, the Tankas of Tibet, and Abbot Suger's femous 12th-century essay in

with underlying structures, or spatial relationships, This traditioo extends from Cézanne through the Cubists and Giacometti. It seems to relate to existeotial philosophical questions of how to manifest, make visual, the experience of being.

In this tradition, to which I relate myself, the primary experieoce is the artist's. The performing of the technical acts of painting and of sculpture, in techniques devised by the artists to allow them to conduct their search, is the eod-all. It is experienced by the artist. My sitters have only lent me their faces.

tice of staring at a jewel, los-ing himself in its play of lights and colors and reaching God in the process. His request to bis architect to create a chapel that would architecturally parallel this experieoce led to the developmeot of the "Gothic" style. In our day Color Field and Op artists use the phenome-000, and in dealing with the buman bead and figure so do L

I stare at the model, Each detail of the form as I transcribe it into paint fills my entire field of visual and result in paint, of course, is controlled by the physicality of my effort to re-creete the look of the forms lo their spece that is in front of me. I never change the result to. make the drawing academically correct: I trust my eyes.

My painting experience is so intensely felt that my portrait subjects can, and sometimes do, ask whose ego is involved, theirs or mine. My paioting technique (which is my ego asserting itself) allows me only to depict what I see at a given moment It is outside of my concerns at that moment to deal with the sitter's concerns of how he wishes himself to be seen (his ego assertion).

The sitter's concerns have been the usual concerns of the specialist portraitist, while portraits painted by the nonspecialists like Rembrandt, Goya or Kokoschka seem to be the product of the artist expressing his attitudes toward the sitter, commenting on the sitter. But there is another tradition of artistic concern which deals

'I Use The Whole Body'

By LUCAS SAMARAS

Fabian Zaccone, my high school art teacher, first showed me that art was an activity of seriousness, nobility, intelligence, morality and wonder. And other such things. He also took me and one or two other students to a life class club that he belonged to. Imperfect naked adult models beld one-minute or teo-minute poses, and we sketched and hlushed. It was better than going out for football, attending a class in dissection or visiting a bordello. I learned to capture and hold form and character.

But as charming, erctic or mysterious as it was, this working from a model an I later posing my friends; makiog appointments, playing on their vanity; me active you passive, and other such conditions hindered creativity for me. I required privacy. didn't want to think in somebody else's presence. I learned to become my own model, my own centrifugal searcher and source for

All four pictures are composed in a manner that recalls innumerable old master paintings of the Madonna and Child. What makes the well-known version at Witkin stand out is the worried expression on the woman's face and the way the children have hidden their faces. This combination of little human touches focuses attention on the mother's thoughts and turns the brief encounter between a well-known photographer and an nuknown woman into a picture of every mother who has ever been desperately concerned about the welfare of her children.

A similar leap into emiversality, so difficult for photographers to make, accounts for the success of the second most famous FSA photograph, Arthur Rothstein's nightmarish "Fleeing a Dust Storm." In this picture a man and two boys are running toward a shack across a gray and barren landscape. The man and the older boy are nearly there, but the younger boy, one arm over his eyes, is lagging behind. The viewer does not have to know what he is fleeing from to feel his fear of being left alone outside. These pictures are among the masterpieces of modern photography, if not of all modern arts But the photographers who produced them did not have the freedom of action that many people believe is necessary for the production of artistic masterpieces. On the contrary, they were working within rather severe limitations. As employees of a U. S. government agency they had to concentrate on specific subjects related to the agency's aims, and most of the 270,000 photographs they took are said to have depicted rows of home-canned food on a shelf, or the equivalent.

They were, in the second place, under the direction of Roy Emerson Stryker, a crack administrator and trained economist who used the photographers of the FSA to forward his personal project of creating a photographic history of American agriculture. This meant they had to make pictures that would reveal the details of American farm life, not semi-abstract studies of rocks and roots. Last but not least, the FSA photographers were all children of the 1930's who believed that art could and should be used to effect pobtical and social changes. Coming from comfortable middle-class or wealthy homes, they did not suffer personally from the Depression, but they were genuinely distressed by the poverty they saw as they traveled around the country for the FSA, and they wished to use their cameras to help alleviate it. This meant pictures of gnarled hands and anxious faces that would wring the hearts of those who were still well off and force hard-hearted congressmen to enact needed legislation.

There are dozens of FSA photographs in the new book and exhibition that have the basic buman appeal of "Migrant Mother" and "Fleeing e Dust Storm," and not all of them are pictures of anxiety and fear. From the beginning the FSA photographers were charged with bringing in pictures that showed the agency's successes in the field, and Russell Lee's carefully organized picture of a farm couple solemnly enjoying their leisure in their livingroom is an example of that. Later, as America'a entry into World War II approached, the FSA photographers were expected to produce pictures showing America's strength and determination to win. In 1940 'Stryker instructed photographer Jack Delano to look out for autumn pictures. 'Emphasize the idea of abundance . . . and pour maple syrup over it—you know, mix well with white clouds and put on a skyblue platter. I know your damned photographer's soul writhes, but to hell with it. Do you think I give a damn ebout a photographer's soul with Hitler at our doorstep?" Delano went up to New England in autumn and came back with pictures of picturesque villages and barns worthy of Wyeth or Strand.

Most of the FSA photographers fought with the agency, and some did not last very long. Walker Evans, for instance, worked so slowly that when the budget crunch came, as it did more than once during the project's eight years, he was let go. Yet the limitations within which all the photographers had to work did not prevent bim from composing his famous photographs of a sharecropper's kitchen as carefully as e painting by Mondrian. Nor did they prevent each photographer from approaching the common task in an individual way, so that there are quite visible differences between Evans'a controlled compositions and, for example the scatty, from-the-hip compositions of Ben Shahn. But composition was not an end io itself, and oeither was selfexpression. The picture had to say something clear and definite about the people or things being photographed. With very few exceptions the best known FSA photographs do just that, and this is one of the reasons why they continue to be shown and reproduced so many years after they ceased to bave value merely as documents. 📕

'Poor Murderer' Is Guilty

beyond). It is sheer pleasure to watch her not drape herself against handy objects but simply to melt into place against a curtain, on a platform, beside a stair. A very unshowy form of mercury, this lady.

As the raggle-taggle plotting comes to some sort of conclusion - it is not so much incoherent as just plain uninteresting - Miss Schell is given one last opportunity to let an honest emotion escape her. Having suffered through the imprisoned man's psychodrama, she comes to love him in a way that she had not before - and she makes us believe that, weary as we have become of the run-oo ravings of this underdone Hamlet. Otherwise, however, the effect of "Poor Murderer" upon me, at least, was perverse. It gave me new respect for the Russians and Russian sympathizers who now decide what Czech audiences shall and shall not see, among other things. Apparently they have found some meaning in the random shuttling between Hamlet, Pirandello, Cyrano and Marat/Sade, and 1 salute them for it. It must have taken work, work, work around

Naturally, and fruitlessly, we look for political implications in the verbose play-within-a-play-within-a-play, if only-because the piece has been suppressed and the author has somewhat elusively intimated that if he had to choose between art and politics, he'd choose politics. Is Mr. Luckinbill, confined for lunacy, a symbol of lost freedom, Miss Schell a stand-in for those Czechs who let freedom go in exchange for the security of a father-image? But now I am working as hard as the political censors must have done. The play neither says nor dramatizes anything half so specific. Which means that, left to its simple love story, it is - behind the pretentious trappings - very trivial indeed. All our elaborate leaping back and forth between illusioo and reality has accomplished nothing more than cause an actress to feel sorry for, and a bit tenderer about. an unstable actor. Small reward for the labor.

Nor is the artifice particularly well managed. Director Herbert Berghof has kept the venture at studio-workshop temperature: all values are left equal as they march by one by one, no underscorings help us to grasp the internal shape of the bustle. Mr. Luckinbill, normally a first-rate performer, plays urgently but without vocal or intellectual roots: in the nonstop rush, which hurried sounds should we take as important? Valuable standbys. - Ruth Ford, Larry Gates, Felicia Monteallegre - are allowed to do just that: stand by, wasting their presences beneath the soiled chandeliers. Paul Sparer manages to ring a little something out of the assumed role of Mr. Luckinbill's father, spending his own nights in sexual revelry while whipping his son for "lewd acts performed upon himself"; and Kevin McCarthy, as the company's overripe leading man, does even better.

Indeed it is in the growing reletionship between Mr. McCarthy and protégé Luckinbill that we come upon the evening's most attractive irony. Mr. Luckinbill knows, you see, why he is being befriended: when an actor's star begins to fade, it's always best for him to discover and promote a vounger one, before the public does. Mr. McCarthy balances the shrewdness of his move against a genuine generosity nicely. But Miss Schell and a few ironies are not enough to acquit "Poor Murderer."

William Archibald's "The Innocents," revived with Claire Bloom in the role of the new governess who must contend with unseen evil forces for the hearts and minds of two precocious children, would seem to have made its initial-possibly fatal-mistake in what its producers must have regarded as a coup. Harold Pinter, master of the unspoken and the sometimes unspeakable, crown prince of not quite traceable suspense, was snared to direct this latest version, already closed, of Henry James's novella "The Turn of the Screw."

The screw was turned all too soon. Unlike Pinter's own plays, in which menace is to be sensed before the first doorbell has rung, "The Innocents" is a work in which "secret disorders" must be uncovered in the perfectly normal, in the apparent guilelessness of children, in the ordinary day's passing from piano-practice in the living-room to flower-gathering in the garden. But Mr. Pinter had begun by screening warnings at us: the curtain rose on a white-frocked little girl at the piano in a house of vast, chilling spaces peneled with what seemed to be coffin-wood. We were at once in "The Bad Seed," hatched out of "The Old Dark House.'

Strictly speaking, John Lee Beatty's setting was a handsome, evocative, functional one: ceiling-bigh windows, as ribbed as a birdcage, looked out upon living branches; we did not at once have to see the sunset's fire through this glass. All it asked for, to begin with, was plausible behavior inside it: children who might play simple games before they played mecabre ones; housekeepers and governesses who might truly have taken tea without trembling at the touch

But the staging was ominous, and was meant to be. throughout. Rarely did two people sit and so much as pretend to chat; rarely did intimacy seem possible. Insteed, a housekeeper spoke from a ghostly balcony to a governess hovering at a faraway window. Wheo the lad of the house returned from school (under a cloud, to be sure), he metamorphosed from the garden to stand locked in arrogant silence, as much a brooding intruder as the "ghosts" who would materalize later. The gap that was constantly open between the four people who inhabited the mansion was a gap swiftly filled, in our minds, with dread, apprehension, defience. Mr. Pinter sought suspense when he should have been looking for contrasts (the play, after all, is called "The Ionocents"); and the actors all seemed to heve come straight from Suspense School.

There was very little left for the "ghosts" to do-en thing baving been so emphatically intimated—and proved most unthreatening, even emusiog, when they appear. The director had backed them up with a kin sonic echo that could have been a heartbeat or couldbeen a muffled gong or could have been some noises esc from the Holland Tunnel, but there was no threat le them. It had all been used up.

Of course Mr. Pinter arrived at a successful gestur two, as did his players. There was a subtly chilling second between Miss Bloom and housekeeper Pauline agan as they realized that the little girl might be alone in dangerous garden, both bolting for the french doors common frightened impulse. And, early on when garrulous little girl tried to explain her habitual chatti with an offhand "Things just pop into my head and t doesn't seem much sense in leaving them there," there a strong, though brief, sense of a possible child living possible home. Surely Mr. Archibald's play and Jar story (difficult for the theater in any case) wanted

By the way, should ghosts take curtain calls? I have been able to decide.

'Life Goes to the Movies' Comes to the Homescreen

he NEC "Big Event" series, ballyhooed as a weekly showcase for a wide variety of apecial offerings, has turned out to be an interesting idea desperately in search of suitable material. lts "Big Party" opening several weeks ago, providing live coverage of three lavish non-events rk City, was a financial, artistic and rating fiasco. afficial said the network could have done better l opera, which would have got the same low an incalculable amount of lofty praise and presnother event, NBC did manage to get a Sunday orld Series game switched from the traditional lot to evening prime time, but that ploy hardly inspired programing.

ht at 8, however, the potential of the 'Big ncept is somewhat more clearly seen in a threenction called "Life Goes to the Mnvies." The question is the weekly magazine that ceased im 1972. The movies are entirely American tating from the 1930'a. As a co-production of ry-Fox TV and Time-Life Films, the program iced by Mel Stuart and written by Richard he executive producer is Jack Haley Jr., the sible for the successful "That's Entertainment" luting the American musical film.

I glossy scrapbooks, "Life Goes to the Movies" iy affair, stuffed with teasing snippets and moments, wrapped in hroad generalities desarily for surface effects. But the movies themstars, the glamor on-screen and off, the curious reflection of reality to be found in popular culture remain incredibly fascinating. Being in the dreadfully awkward age category of 40ish, and having spent as much as possible of my youth entranced inside seedy neighborhood theaters, I wonder if films of the late 1930's and the 40's can mean anything personal to younger audiences. But then there is television and its pecular time-warp function. It is astunishing to discover that children today are growing up nn the same movie dlet as children of a few decades ago. Bogart and Cagney and Davis and Crawford are part of their normal fantasy lives. In fact, NBC's "Big Event" for next week, perhaps its biggest event for the season, is nothing less than "Gone With the Wind," a film made nearly four decades agn.

Tonight's movie survey, going from plucky Shirley Temple to vulnerable Marilyn Monroe, from ultimate dreams of romance (Astaire and Rogers) to feverish nightmares of paranoia ("Easy Rider"), attempts to establish historical contexts for certain fads and specific groups of films. Shirley MacLaine one of the hosts (the others are Henry Fonda and Liza Minnelli) is forced to present a theory about magazines such as Life dealing with "our outer reality" while movies cater to our inner realities, "those that fulfill some secret wish." But it is not difficult to appreciate why "escapist" fare was popular in the depressed 30's. For every "The Grapes of Wrath" there were a hundred light comedies and musicals selling fantasies of perfect grace and style.

The studios were "dream factories" presided over by ruthlessly practical husinessmen. Harry Cohn of Columbia Marilyn Monroe's bittersweet Hollywood career was faithfully chronicled by the weekly magazine that provides the framework for NBC's Big Event this evening.

Pictures is casually described in this TV production as "pro-fane and sadistic." But consider a partial list of films produced in 1939 alone: "Wuthering Heights," "Goodhye, Mr. Chips," "Destry Rides Again," "The Wizard of Oz," "Stagecoach," "Gunga Din," "Ninotchka," "Dark Victory," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and, of course, "the biggest of them all," the David O. Selznik production of "Gone With the Wind." Curiously enough, some of the more intriguing mnments in "Life Goes to the Movies" are plucked not from the films but from material related to them. A sequence of screen tests for the role of Scarlett O'Hera in "Gone With the Wind" finds actresses such as Paulette Goddard, Lana Turner, Susan Hayward and Jean Arthur vying fur the part that eventually brought Vivien Leigh an Academy Award. The Andrews Sisters record "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy of Company B" for troops in World War II. Yvonne De Carlo entertains at the front, singing "Babalu" of all things. Marilyn Monroe is followed from pinup noturiety through stardom and failed marriages to e painful scene after e-divorce proceeding, of being trapped in a court-building coroer, hiding her face, her back to the insistent news cameras.

For many years, Hollywood remained a dream, where cosmetics experts could transform the drabbest of objects intn glittering symbols. But the perfect romances began to fade as script fodder in the early 1960's. Assassinations, Vietnam, Woodstock and the phenomenal growth of TV ("television was to the movies what the H-bomb was to the rest of society," one host tells us) changed the nature of the film industry. The narrators say that nn mure consolatinn was to he had from movies-"movies were now part . of the problem." Always hustling, movies were endorsing ... a new morality in such films as "The Graduate," "Klute" and "Dirty Harry." At the same time, though, nne of the biggest box-office bits of all time was "The Sound of Music," firmly entrenched in the tradition of cunsolation.

"Life Goes 10 the Mnvies" has curious gaps: as noted, foreign films are excluded, and going to the movies today without a Bergman or a Fellini is a woefully incomplete experience. But even certain American landmarks, such as Sunset Boulevard," are elso omitted from this anthology. On the whole, thrugh, the material is dazzling, and television does well by the movies. Which is only fair, masmuch as the movies have been more than generous in fleshing out anemic televisinn schedules over the years. The film editor for this project was Robert Lambert.

Nancy Walker was born, in 1922, into a family of vaudeville performers who called themselves The Three Bartos. She spent most of her childhood touring across America and Europe in the company of performers like W. C. Fields and Burns and Allen, and studying intermittently at the Professional Children's School in New York

"I didn't mind the traveling," sbe said, "It was when we settled down that I got a little shaky. You can't go from touring places like France and Italy to playing tag with a bunch of little kids in New York.

"I never liked childish things much," continued the woman who first became engaged when she was 14 years old. Tve always wanted to get on with it."

Although she knew, from age 10, that she wanted to be a performer, Miss Walker didn't know she'd be a comedienne until she started getting laughs in "Best Foot Forward." "After that, people just kept writing parts for me," sbe said. "I never had any strugglingactor problems. I never went to another audition. When I was 20, I signed a contract at MGM and went to Hollywood, but I was always coming back to New York to do shows."

A long-faced, red-haired woman not quite five feet tall, Miss Walker is more likely to portray cut-ups and good buddies than the one who gets the man. But if this was ever hard for ber, she will not say so. "I never minded not being kissed, onstage," she said, firmly denying that she wanted to be taller, or more blue-

'I've always thought people who are on, offstage, save very little for onstage.'

eved and button-nosed. "I was getting kissed offstage."

Miss Walker does not say much about ber early marriage to Gary Moore, which lasted just 10 months. In 1951, she married David Craig, a composer and youal coach, who had been ber teacher, and they bave one daughter,

Miranda, who is now 22. "Keeping up with my career and my child was never a problem," she said. "When Miranda was 5, we sat down and had a talk and I explained the difference hetween my being there and not being there. She knew I had to go to work, to be happy, and that was it. As for her marriage, Miss Walker describes herself as a "hausfrau" whose first responsibility is "to make my husband happy." "I don't care how unliberated that sounds," she said, "I don't ask people what they think I do exactly what makes me bappy, and taking care of my husband makes me happy." Up until this year, in fact, she did all her own laundry and cooking, as well as keeping up a big garden-free of all gladioli because she thinks the gladiolus is "a boring flower."

"I have a habit of listening very intently."

If her husband comes first, at least one decision in the Craig marriage, however, was made for the sake of Nancy Walker—namely, the couple's move, in the late 1960's, from New York to California.

"Ob, this used to be a marvelous city," she said, looking only fleetingly wistful. "It was like a great big villege. You could always hop into e cab and go see Mabel Mercer or run into Sardi'a and meet a bunch of friends, and they were all working.

"But then there was less work here. They stopped doing so many big shows, because there just wasn't enough money, and they stopped doing musicals tailored to stars. There wasn't a place for me, because I'd always stand out and upset the balance in a regular show. So I didn't have much work, and when I'm not busy, I get crazy.

"My husband geve me a great gift by agreeing to move to the Coast. Of course, he's so good at what he does, he can work anywhere, but he missed New York a lot. My friends thought I was e kook, doing television commercials. TV was looked down on-doing TV meant you had to make a buck. But TV's where the work was, Look at Bert Lahr-a great comedian, and the last work of his life was potato chip commercials."

If Euell Gibbons ever lost sleep over bewking Grape Nuts Flakes, nr Laurence Olivier, when be agreed to make camera commercials, Miss Walker admits to no such conflicts. "I use Bounty myself," she points out, sounding just like Rosie. And that may be the point: Nancy Walker is not so far removed from the character she portrays in her commercials that playing Rosie becomes a compromise of some loftier theatrical persona. "I approach my Bounty commercials the same way I approach any acting role," she said. "The only difference is you're there to sell e product, not yourself."

For Miss Walker, the commercials have led to other things— first to appearances on the "Mary Tyler Moore Show," as Rhode Morgenstern's appealingly overbearing Jewish mother (Miss Walker herself was raised a Catholic) and then to a regular role, when Valerie Harper, aa Rhoda, got a series of ber

Miss Walker remains off-hand when talking about ending her associe-tion with "Rhoda." "I can remember things fondly," she said, "but I don't want to have them back again. My motto in life is never look hack-not to New Ynrk or stage acting, which I left without a tear. I like to get on with the next."

With her new comedy series "Nancy," in which she plays a talent agent bandling a somewhat motley set of clients, Miss Walker professes to he enthusiastic, but she will not set her beart on the show's success or be miserable if it fails. (So far, "Nancy" is less than a hit but not in danger of cancellation.) "It's just 13 weeks," said the show's star, and then she got up from her chair-moving as if her feet burt, and as if she were used to it—to get herself a glass of water.

"I don't waste time wishing for things or crying when they don't happen," she said. "Because the only thing you can count on is that whatever you've been planning is not going to work out that way. I survive—that's as far as I can

Notes: Figuring the Worth Of a Fred Silverman

year ago, not everyone in the television industry believed Fred Silverman to be a programing genius. !lcw everybody believes. For five years he had ruled over a winning CBS prime-time schedule, but his detractors considered that unremarkable since CBS had been No. 1 in the ratings race for 15 years before. In their view, keeping the leading network first was largely a maintenance joh. But early last year, Mr. Silverman joined ABC, which habitually ran last, and now that network is where CPS used to be-on top-and CBS is trailing in a rield of three.

That, however, is only the hroad outline of the story. The text is more convincing, enough so that one executive at a rival network who didn't think sn before now pays Silverman honor as "the greatest televisinn programer ever." Another, puzzling over the Silverman feats that have been accomplished with generally mundane shows, concludes: "It's not that Freddie understands the audience better than anyone else, it's that Freddie is the audience."

Network programers tend to be evaluated by the success ratio of their new ahows, which is like a batting average in baseball. Two-fur-five. or a .333 average, is usually about as good as it gets. In the 20 months he bas been with ABC. Silverman's average has been around .750, or three-for-four. Mnreover, most of his shows are not just successful, they're enormous hits-

'It's not that he understands the audience better than anyone else, it's that he is the audience.'

Laverne and Shirley," "Bionic Woman," "Charlie's Angels," "Starsky and Hutch," "Family" and "Rich Man, Poor Man," among the others.

Two of the others, "Donny and Marie" and "The Captain and Tennille," go to the beart of the Silverman pbenomenon. In recent years, he has developed the same show four times: a variety hour huilt around a male-female pop recording team. Perhaps it is just coincidence that the first two-"Sonny and Cher" and "Tony Orlando and Dawn" (Dawn being two females)were perking in the ratings when Silverman was at CBS but began to decline in popularity when he left. The crucial fact is that "Donny" and Captain," mounted by Silverman at ABC and similar in many respects to the CBS shows, are humming along nicely.

A good programer is not only a provider of hits but a strategist who can slot shows where they will most damage the competition. Silverman'a moves this year have broken the CBS hold on Mondays and Saturday nights, and they have given ABC a respectable share of the Saturday-night audience for the first time in more than a dec-

While CBS and NBC programers struggled with the problem of finding new kind of show for the 8 to 9. P.M. "family viewing bour" that began last fall, Silverman moved on the time period with an array of series that showed the others the way.

ABC had hired Silverman away from CBS with a contract that reportedly will pay him $1 million over three . years. His new admirers at the other ; networks deem that a terrific bargain. noting that by improving ABC's primetime ratings average by two points -over the course of a year (which he appears to be doing) Silverman could be responsible for almost $40 million in additional profits to the network.

"If Barbara Walters is worth $1 million a year just for moving the ratings up one single point for one single halfhour program, what should a Freddie Silverman be worth?," an NBC executive mused.

The Presidency And the Arts

high places while the arts were actually left to shift for themselves.

That this is no longer quite the case -that the arts in this country are now. alheit oo a woefully small scale, the beneficiaries of important Government initiatives—owes nothing, of course, to such displays of taste by the Presidents who have been responsible for the change. President Johnson was accused of many things in the course of his administration, but never, so far as I know, of being an esthete, yet it was ne who established the two Federal agencies—the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities-that sow play such a significant role in our cultural life.

President Nixon was likewise oever suspected of harboring any serious esthetic interests-and the White House tapes made it abundantly clear exactly how be felt about people in the arts-yet it was under the Nixon administration, oddly enough, that the Federal budget for the arts really began to prosper.

The figures are rather dramatic. President Johnson launched the National Endowment for the Arts in 1966 with a paltry budget of $2.5 million. (Even so, the establishment of the agency was vigorously opposed by then Representative Gerald Ford. Had Mrs. Ford, one wonders, not yet disclosed to him her ardent interest in Martha Graham?) By the time L.B.J. left office, the figure was up to $8.2 million. Under Nixon, the increases were swift and significant-climbing from $15 million in 1971 to $75 million in 1975. There was a similar pattern of increases for the National Endowment for the Humanities.

I have never heard anyone of any persuasion, in or out of politics, Republican or Democrat, conservative, liberal or radical, adequately explain this phenomenon. It remains a conundrum and an embarrassment—an embarrassmeot, because so many people in-volved in the arts had long felt a special loathing for Nixon even before Watergate confirmed their worst suspicions. It was all the more of a conundrum, moreover, because the National Endowments under Nixon functioned, most observers agree, without political interference or manipulationsomething that could oot be said of other, less obviously vulnerable hranches of the Government-and earned the solid respect of most professionals io the field.

The explanation of this paradox, if there is one to be found, does not lie, I think, where the media have usually attempted to locate it-in the personalities or tastes of our political leaders. or in those of their wives. It lies, rather, in the realm of social changeand in the political perception of that change. The fact is, more and more Americans want the arts in their lives and in their communities, and they want them now. They feel deprived if they are denied access to the arts, and they are not reluctant to say so. According to a recent Harris poll-and it is significant, of course, that there should even be such a poll oo this question-some 93 perceot of the American public regards it as important to the 'quality of life" in their communities that they have adequate artistic facilities (museums, theaters, concert halls, etc.), and a majority expressed a willingness to pay as much as an additional $10 a year in taxes to secure and maintain such facilities.

Holders of public office, from the White House to the state house to city hall and town council, are now obliged to recognize this groundswell of feeling, and to act on it. The National Governors Conference and the U.S. Conference of Mayors have both gone on record with statements supporting the arts, and politicians are not alone in this respect. Any but the most berighted corporation executive knows that nowadays he is going to have trouble recruiting the best talent for his organization if It is located in a cultural desert. And the A.F.L.-C.I.O. has added its voice to the national chorus urging an expanded Government program in the arts. At a time when everyone, it seems, is against

"big government" and "big spending," office-seekers urging a radical curtailment of Government expenditures in the arts are remarkably hard to find.

This is the reason why both of the major parties have included kindly, if still rather vague, planks supporting one arts in their policy platforms this year. The arts now loom in the public mind as a "good thing," a symbol of the good life, perhaps of civilization itself, and therefore constitute an iofluential constituency it would be folly for any viable candidate to offend. This is the reason, too, for the "conversion" of both President Ford and Jimmy Carter on this issue. It really has nothing to do with Mr. Ford's much-publicized discovery of Calder in Grand Rapids or the number of times Mr. Carter has attended the concerts of the Atlanta Symphony. It has everything to do with the way they-or their advisers-have gauged the cultural appetites and aspirations of the voters and their families.

It was Mr. Ford who used the word "conversion" to describe his own reversal on the arts issue, and it is not a bad word to apply to Mr. Carter's gyrations either, From having opposed the very idea of the National Endowment for the Arts in 1966, Mr. Ford has now moved to secure its biggest budget ever for 1977—estimated to la something around $85 million. Mr. Carter, "twice-born" in this, as in other spiritual realms, followed a similar scenario as Governor of Georgia. He began his term of office (1971-1974) by reducing the state's arts budget to $99,279—a little less than even Lester Maddox had given it-and liquidating the Georgia Arts Commission as an independent agency. The Georgia Council for the Arts and Humanities (as it is now called) became a division of the Office of Planning and Budget, ere it remains and where, until final weeks of Mr. Carter's term, it was geoerally starved for state funds ($70,000 in 1973). Then in 1974, for reasons one can easily guess, Mr. Carter saw the light, transferred money from the Governor's discretionary funds, and brought the state's contribution up to $220,000-a respectable if not a spectacular figure.

Although Mr. Carter has mistakenly invoked the Kennedy administration as a standard to follow in this matterinterviewed about his arts policy in Los Angeles in August, he said: '7 think this is the kind of thing that bas been neglected perhaps since John Kennedy was President. I would like to reinstitute that thrust."-we can probably attribute that mistake to Democratic piety rather than to any serious examination of the record. The signs are pretty clear, in any case, that neither a Carter nor a new Ford administration would attempt to reverse the present trend toward larger Government subsidies for the arts. If there can be said to be a single issue in this campaign beyond partisan dispute, it is this one -another measure, of course, of the extent to which both the arts and public support for them have established themselves in American life.

What is less clear, alas, is what new forms, or what modifications of established forms, these larger Government subsidies will assume. One hears a good deal about "de-centralization" Mr. Carter has sometimes used the word in speaking of his arts policy, and it is a word often on the lips of officials of the National Endowmeots, of the state arts councils and of other public agencies io the field, especially when the time comes to ask legislators for more money. It is a word and an idea that no one really wants to oppose -- who would willingly deprive even the remotest country crossroads of a chance to hear good music or see a first-rate exhibition?—but it is also a word that, in the name of an indisputable virtue, conceals a certain misunderstanding about the way the arts actually function and prosper.

To put the matter bluntly, the arts thrive in situations of urban concentration and cosmopolitan vitality. It is in the cities that standards are set and ideas are generated, in the cities that talent is nurtured and recognized, in the cities—and in this country, one city in particular-where the arts really grow, where they receive significant intellectual nourishment and criticism and new creative energy. Without Paris and New York, there would be no

Calder to admire in Grand Rapids: without New York there would be no Martha Graham legend for the White House to celebrate. The arts need the cities, and the cities need the artsthat is a fudamental fact of our cultural life, and it ought to be the cornerstone of any national arts policy.

It is a fact that President Ford, despite his "conversion" to the arts, managed to overlook when he turned a deaf ear to New York's fiscal crisis, and Mr. Carter's talk of "de-centralizing" the arts likewise betrays an indifference to it. If it is the growth of American culture we are concerned with, and not merely its packaging and distribution, then it is to the dynamic artistic life of the cities that money must flow in larger and larger quantities. Only then will we be assured of having something worthwhile - something more than a cultural sop-to send to that remote country crossroads.

This is the issue, I believe, that is going to loom larger than ever for whoever it is that determines a White House arts policy in the next administration. Everyone now agrees that the Govern-ment has an obligation to subsidize the arts in this country, but the battle over where the money is to be spent may be just beginning now that the sums are getting to be sizable. We bave come a long way, but we are still without the kind of leadership that can bring candor, intelligence and courage to the really hard decisions.

Good Solution

Herbert Ross's "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution" has just opened to all-around embu-siastic reviews—Vincent Canby has called mastic reviews—Vincent Canby has called it "the most exhibitating entertainment of the film year to date." The film takes off from an attempt by Sherlock Holmes's hiographer, Dr. Watson, to save Holmes from insanity by getting him to Viena for treatment by Signuad Freud. Nicol Williamson, Alan Aridge and Paheer Darrel are involved. Alan Arkin and Robert Duval are involved

Strand's Brand

The photographer Paul Strand (1891-1976), who broke away from the soft-focus romanticism of the 19th century to pioneer in humanitarian social realism in both still and motion pictures, is being accorded two exhibitions which open this week. Light Gallery, which has recently moved in new quarters on Fifth Avenue, will have vintage prints from the Strand estate, giving an overview of his career. These incl New York prints made when Strand was associated with Stleglitz, photographs of the Southwest taken in the 30's, New England in the 40's, Italy and France in the 50's, the Hebrides in the 50's, and Romania and Ghana in the late 60's. Helios Flying Studio will complement the Light show by present ing images published in Stieglitz' magazine Camera Work, the entire suite from a 1940 "Photographs of Mexico" portfolio, plus 20 additional silver prints and photos. Memoirs of a elebrity Photographer essional, Miss Sills knew she should be in the l in a scene from the opera 'Maria Stuarda.'"

By JACK MITCHELL

eing a photographer on assignment to photograph a celebrity is somewhat like being a hit-man. The difference is that the hitman is hired to shoot-tokill and the photographer is hired to shoot for posterity, or at least for some kind of publicity.

Through the last decade my photography assignments have involved working almost exclusively with people in the creative and performing arts. A large number of them are household names. Those who aren't think they are, so my working conditions are the same for both groups.

Celebrated subjects are really not that much more vain than the average person, but pictures are more important to them because a published photograph can seriously effect a performer's career. I remember Cybill Shepherd asking me to use a halo light behind her hair because she wanted to get a shampoo commercial.

Women do not have the exclusive right to vanity, although they've had the right longer. Men are also careful as to how they are photographed, even if it means feigning an interest in photography to get a look through the camera. Director Mike Nichols, after I had set up a wide-angle-lens shot of him, asked me to change places with him so he could see if I was getting any distortion of his face. If a star evidences any interest I encourage him, or her, to look through the camera finder, especially when I am working with a wide-angle lens,

Often-photographed people are well aware that a wide-angle lens can crucify their famous face. There was a recent period when it was the "different" thing to do. Most stars have had It done to them, at least once, and hate it. I use a wide-angle lens only to manipulate backgrounds and content, never for deliberate distortion of faces. I never deliberately make a person Continued on Page 44

Photographing the Birth Of Your Own Celebrity

"How fantastic to be present at the birth of my child, assist in a Lamaze delivery and record it all on film."

By LONNIE SCHLEIN

June 28, 1976 The scene is the labor room of New York Hospital's Lying-In division and I'm experiencing some of the most intense feelings of my life. My wife, Monique, is now approaching the final stage of her nine-hour labor, and in accordance with natural childbirth methods, I am assisting her. My Nikon, three lenses, filters, four rolls of film and all sorts of related photographic equipment lie beside her bed. I'm wondering why in the world I've taken all of this along. I've been too involved in helping her with her breathing exercises to take any pictures-and anyway, who wants to photograph one's wife as she tries to

I'm tempted to ask the nurse to lock my camera away until it's all over, but I keep thinking of the birth and how much I want a photographic record of it. Now, we're told that full dilation has taken place. I'm told to slip ioto the hospital's special gown as Monique is suddenly wheeled down the hall into the delivery room. I'm extremely nervous, but can't figure out if it's because I'm concerned and excited about this momentous event or whether the thought of having to deal with a camera at this time is causing needless anxiety, I've photographed museum exhibitions, movie stars, musicians and mountains. But the thought of photographing the birth of my own child is scary! Nature may not allow me the t'me to focus and fool with f/stops or lens speeds, and I'm fearful I'll miss something if I should dare peer through

My wife is giving her final pushes and the contractions have intensified. As my eyes dart back and forth across the rocm, I'm struck with a profound realization: Our lives are about to undergo an unalterable change. The baby's head begins to emerge. 5:56 P.M. The delivery room is silent. Only an Continued on Next Page occasional mutter from the doctor can be heard as he instructs Momque. The unmistakable click of a Nikon shutter is heard. Is this my camera? Experiencing so many feelings; my thoughts are running wild in so many directions that hardly realize that I'm the one who picked up the camera and snapped the shutter. Can't remember if I focused. I'm sware for the first time of how fantastic it is that I can be present at the birth of my own child, assisting my wife and recording it all on film.

5:58 P.M. My daughter is born! Click. My Nikon reacts. There's suddenly great commotion in the room as the ourses, doctors and assistants go sboot their work. Monique is exhilarated. I'm feeling joyous. My reaction is one of incredulity. Strange, but my Nikon continues to function, seemingly apart from me. My daughter is oow cleaned and prepared for her first experience in her mother's arms. Click! The Nikon records the event. Monique lies back oo the table, holds our daughter high above her, and makes some strange, heretofore unheard of, sounds as though to announce to the world the arrival of ber jewel. And certainly that's the picture for all the world to

What I've just described is still a rather extraordinary occurrence in this country. The Lamaze method of prepared natural childbirth, now the most commonly used here, was first iotroduced into France from the Soviet Uoioo in 1952 and was hrought to the United . States around 1961. Fifteen years after its introduction, it's not difficult to find a hospital in just about any part of the United States that utilizes the method. But it's quite another story to find one of these hospitals that permits the father to introduce a camera into the process.

It would be fair to assume that most Lamaze-practicing hospitals outside the city would prefer that pictures not be taken during a delivery. A quick check of some iodicates that their concern is a legal one. Should something go wrong, an attending doctor would hardly relish the thought of his error being recorded oo film, Other hospitals are simply concerned about the distracting and anooying nature of the presence of a camera, I found, bowever, that the larger the hospital, the less likely it is to be concerned about such matters and the greater the chance they'll permit the father to bring his camera along.

Certainly we were lucky to be st New York Hospital. The Lamaze instructors definitely encourage the use of cameras. Dr. Fritz Fuchs, Professor and Chairmso of the Departments of Gynecology and Obstetrics at the hospital, and also my wife's obstetrician, was most cooperative as I photographed the delivery of our baby. When the 11 x 14 prints hung in her room the next day, I suspect he took special pride to them. The hospital, we were told, was chiefly coocerned about the safety and care of the patient, but they did require me to sign a form stating that my photographs will oever be put to commercial or advertising present in the delivery room are of an explosive oature and the fear is that the use of flash might ignite them. (Most people think the restrictions on flash are a precautioo against damage that might be done to an infant's eyes.)

· Not all hospitals in the New York area are so liberal in their policies regarding the use of cameras in the delivery room. If you hope to take pictures of this momentous event, you ought to check with your hospital to clarify its particular set of rules. Columbia Presbyterian and St. Vincent's Hospital do not allow cameras in the delivery room under any circumstances. Wilfred Van Atta, director of Presbyterian's public relations department, explained that Dr. Raymond L. Vande Weile, Professor and Chairmao of the hospital's Gynecology and Obstetrics divisions, waots to avoid legal suits and "disruptions" in the delivery rooms. According to Mr. Van Atta, Dr. Vande Weile thinks the presence of a camera creates a "circus atmosphere."

Lenox Hill Hospital, according to one of its nursing supervisors, does allow cameras but only with prior discussion between patient and doctor, and subsequent written permission. This is a relatively new pobcy, as last year cameras were forbidden. Mount Sinai Hospital, according to obstetrics nursing supervisor Charmine Johnsoo, has no objection to cameras, but they definitely do not encourage it. She remarked that the hospital feels there's enough equipment in the room without having to worry about cameras. Special permission from your doctor is re-

If you have decided upon natural childbirth as the only way and if you are fortunate enough to be going to one of the hospitals in the Manhattan area that does allow cameras, here are a few technical tips. Obviously, you'll need an adjustable camera with a fast lens capable of taking pictures in relatively low-light levels. If you don't own one, you can certainly rent one from one of New York's larger camera stores. For example, Olden Camera on Broadway and 32d Street has one of the largest selections of rental merchandise in the city.

The lighting situation in delivery rooms does vary, despite the everpresent overhead surgical lamps. Because of this you'll need a light meter, or better yet, a camera with s built-in meter. Because you can't use flash, you'll need Tri-X film which is rated at 400 ASA. If you're overly concerned about sudden movement, you might "push" the film and shoot at 800 ASA, then have this compensated for in the processing. Personally, I feel you're better off with black-and-white film, but if you insist oo color, the one most ideally suited would be fast colortraosparency film such as Kodak's High-Speed Ektachrome or GAF 500. Color film for priots may not be suitable because it is not fast enough to he used under oormal operating room lighting situations.

Don't do as I did and h with an assortment of lenses. Your normal 50mm is sufficient, and there's oo time to change lenses. It all happens too quickly. I also believe that one roll of film is sufficient. I managed to shoot 18 frames. And don't forget to load your film beforehand. You'll never have time to do it once you're in the delivery ort to catch up on the backlog ed questions, most of the Home it column this week is again belt to Questions and Answers. I to Questions and Answers to letters published here pose milar to those asked by ather a ctual letters may not apart who will, nevertheless, find a printed below. Readers send-tions about home repair probaddress them to: Home Impepartment, The New York Square, New York, N. Y. those questions of general intensevered here.

ive aluminum siding on our is about 20 years old. It Lolor, and has faded badly. ilks extensively when we swn. Can this fading and ling be painted? If so, what it can we use, and will one -T.L.M., Williamsport, Pa. can paint over the faded iding, but you should do job of scrubbing off as chalking material as posyou start to insure a sound a new paint, I would not sing a one-coat job, howind of surface should have it on before the finish coat ou could probably use eior latex paint but because ing I would recommend an course you must remember inted you will have to reperiodically, but the paint to 6 years in most cases.

ve a brick stoop in front that does not get much of several large shade ricks are very green and is frequently in need of icks all around the house d untouched by signs of in you suggest any way the green, moldy look? he vents in the cinder THE PHOTOGRAP this stoop?-Mrs, H.S.J.,

A: You can remove the mold or fungus by scrubbing with a solution of Clorox and water (one part Clorox to three parts water) or, better yet, with one of the chemical solutions sold by swimming pool dealers for removing mold and fungus growths. However, chances are that without sunlight this condition will continue to come backalthough the chemical residue will bold it off longer than if it were not used. As for vents, this might help if the underside of the stoop is hollow, but I doubt if it is. Builders usually fill this in with dirt or rocks when they build stoops of this kind.

Q: Four years ago he had oak floors laid. They were stained walnut and then given two coats of polyurethane varnish. Our problem is that we are constantly finding scratches and marks on the floor even though we were told that polyurethane would be so hard that it would be impenetrable. Is there any solution you can offer to rectify this?-Mrs. E.S., Tomkins Cove, N.Y.

A: Polyurethane varnish is one of the hardest varnishes you can apply to a floor, but it is oot "impenetrable." It can still scratch and show heel marks or scrapes—especially if it is a high gloss (glossy finishes always show scratches more). The fact that it is a dark color makes scratches even more ooticeable. That is why many dark stained floors are not finished with a high gloss varnish—they are given a penetrating sealer finish which gives them a satiny, oiled look. For a varnish finish such as yours (as well as for a peoetrating sealer finish) waxiog at regular intervals is essential. Your letter sounds as though you bave not been using wax, Try applying a good paste wax and buffing it—this will often con-ceal scratches if they are not too bad, and will definitely protect against future scratching. If wax won't cover the scratches the floor will have to be re-sanded, stained and refinished.

Q: Some months ago we installed wall to wall carpet in some rooms and now the wood floors have developed squeaks. We know this means there are loose boards that should be fastened down with nails or screws but it would be difficult to remove the carpet now. Since the base-ment is unfinished, can we make the necessary repairs from below?--M.K., Scarsdale, N.Y. A: Yes, if the underside of the flooring is exposed. Have someone walk around on top while you watch from below. When you find the place where squeaks occur shine a bright light up to see if the subflooring is moving up and down at the point where squeaks occur when the other person steps on and off that area. If so, nail a wood block up against the side of the floor beam just under the place where the subflooring is loose or is buckled slightly upward. Coat the upper edge of this block with glue before nailing it in place. This will support the flooring so it cannot move any more. If the subflooring doesn't move to cause the squeaks, then it means the finished flooring alone is moving (it has bifted slightly up away from the subflooring). In this case have the person unstairs stand oo the spot to bold the finished flooring down, then drive 11/4-inch long wood screws up from below to draw the boards together.

Q: We have used posters to decorate my son's room, putting them up with masking tape, double-stick tape and ordinary Scotch tape. Now we find that we cannot remove the sticky residue from the wall. Can you recommend something that will remove this? -N.N., New York City.

A: You should be able to remove the tape residue by rubbing with a cloth that has been saturated with rubber cement thinner, This is sold in all art supply stores. It is quite inflammable, so make certain windows are open and no one is smoking in the room. O: I've just moved into a house that has rock wool insulation on the floor of the attic and I've been advised to add another six inches to this. Do I put this new layer on top of the old (which seems to be crumbling), or do I remove the old material first? If I place it on top of the old material, do I put the aluminum side up or down?

_N.R.A., Rockville Centre, N.Y.

A: You can put the new-material right on top of the old rock wool. The old material should have had a vapor barrier on the bottom side (aluminum or a heavy treated kraft paper), and if so, the new one should not have another barrier (the foil you speak of). Buy insulation without the foil or paper barrier on one side. Otherwise the new vapor should be sliced or cut up before putting the insulation down. Of course, if the old insulation had no vapor barrier, then take it up and put the new material down first (with the vapor barrier down). Theo replace the old material on top.

Q: Is there any kind of adhesive I can use to cement a metal mailbox to the stone facing on my house? I don't want to drill holes if it is possible to avoid this.-J.K.H., Chicago, Ill. A: You can use a two-part epoxy cement for this job. Make certain both surfaces are perfectly clean, and use one of the putty types.

Fiberglass Panels for Tub Recess

dwellers who are plagued with stained or unsightly walls around recessed bathtubs can solve their problems permanently by installing molded fiberglass panels which come in kit form for just this purpose. Made by the Marlite Division of the Masonite Corporation, Dover, Side panels are installed first. Each of these folds around onto back wall so rear panel fits on top.

Ohio 44622, the Fibergiass Tub Recess Kit consists of two side panels and one overlapping back panel with a moldedin soap dish. It also includes two cartridges of the adhesive used to cement the panels up, as well as a tube of calking and detailed installation instructions. It sells for about $145.

Suitable for application over almost any type of solid wall-plaster, drywall, tile or paint-the panels are installed by first cutting holes in one of the side panels for the shower handles or faucets and spray head. The two side panels, which are 58 inches high, are then trial fitted, after which the adhesive is applied to the back of each before pressing them into position oo the wall. The back panel overlaps the two side panels at each side, so there is no cutting or fitting of joints involved, and it too is held in place with adhesive. If there is a window in the back wall a cut-out is easily made with a saber saw.

he principle of the camera obscura, which was really the forerunner of today's cameras, was known to the 10th century Arabian scholar Alhazen, as well as to Aristotle, centuries before the birth of Christ.

A camera obscura is a darkened chamber (in those days it was often a large chamber or room) with a small hole at one end which acts as a lens through which light can enter to form an image on the wall or surface opposite. Aristotle used this principle to project an image of the partially osed sun, and noticed that the smaller

It was not until 1839 when Daguerre invented his process, that a method was found to permanently fix or capture this image automatically as it was projected.

Thomas Wedgewood, son of the potter Josiah Wedgewood, was one of the pioneer photographers who, in 1790, made the first, "photograms" (these are images created by placing objects such as insect wings and leaves on enlarging paper, shining a light on them, and then developing the paper to show an outline of the object). Shortly after the official announcement of the birth of photography there was strong religious reaction from Germany. "The wish to capture evanescent reflections is not only impossible," thundered the Leipziger Stadtanzeiger, "as It has been shown by thorough German investigation, but the mere desire alone, the will to do so, is blasphemy! God created man in his own image, and no manmade machine may fix the image of God. For real XL-the kind the experts recommend-XL that lets: shoot indoors without hot, blinding lights you need an f/1.2 lens with a 220° shutter. The kind you'll find on all Sankyo XL

In addition to a superb lens, your Sankyo offers still more. Totally automatic exposure control. You just aim and shoot. San does the rest. Your choice of power zooms. Everything from 2.5 to 6 to 1. You also have the choice of 18 fps or the more professic speed of 24 fps. A backlight control, even a red action light to le your "actors" know it's time for action.

And unparalleled sound quality. (In addition to movie equipm we're a major manufacturer of home audio equipment.) With a Sankyo, you get home movies that talk. In perfect synch with hi sound reproduction. To help you make better sound movies, wit your sound camera, Sankyo gives you ear phones (not an ear pl to let you monitor the sound before you shoot and a sound level control for professional sound quality.

His opponents each bid a black suit, and he cue-bid three clubs to ask for a red suit, North passed this, perhaps distracted by Mephistopheles, and the result was down three. The same scenerio was repeated: rage and oaths from the South side of the table, and the soft answer from the Northern side: "Don't worry, they could have made four

Only one East-West pair managed to bid and make the spade game. Two South players tried three no-trump with very different fates. One of them played there after a super-scientific opening, suffered a bidding confusion end received a club lead. He tried to snatch a spade trick, misguessed and was down six tricks. The other declarer played no-trump instead of hearts because he wanted to play the hand. His greed was vindicated, because West led a spade and then defended under a misconception. Two overtricks resulted

When Rimington himself sat South, he opened one diamond as shown and landed in four hearts after his partner had made the weakest negative double on record. The double of one spade correctly showed a few hearts, but it incorrectly advertised possession of a of the Arts of Design at N.Y.U. had a daguerrotype camera constructed for him. Morse became one of the first Americans to use the Daguerre process, and is considered by many to be the father of photography in America. In 1840, Morse joined forces with John William Draper, a professor of chemistry at the University and in a glass roofed studio they began taking portraits at $4 per picture. They soon had all the business they could handle.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning wrote to her friend Mary Russell Mitford in 1843, on seeing photographs for the first time, "... it is not merely the likeness which is precious, but the association and the sense of nearness involved in the thing . . . the fact of the very shadow of the person lying there fixed forever! I would rather have such a memorial of one I dearly love, than the noblest artist's work ever pro-

By 1841 most of the principle cities of the United States had a Daguerrean' Parior or at least a visiting Daguerrotypist. John Quincy Adams, (sixth president of the United States) visited one of these emporiums in 1843 and said, "four Deguerrotype likenesses were taken of my head, all hideous. We stopped at another Daguerrotype office where three more attempts were made to take my likeness. I believe that none of them succeeded."

In 1856, Lewis Carroll, author of "Alice's Adventures In Wonderland" and "Through The Looking Glass," wrote to his uncle to get him a photographic apparatus, "as I want some other occupation here than mere reading and writing." He became the most outstanding photographer of children in the 19th century; and was far more at ease with children than with grownups. Children arriving at Carroll's rooms to be photographed found a marvelous array of dolls and toys, a distorting mirror, a clockwork bear and a flying bat made by Carroll.

In a letter and an autographed first edition of Hiswaths sent to Alexander Hesler (a pioneer Daguerrotypist) in 1854, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow acknowledged that Hesler's daguerrotype of Minnehaha Falls was, the inspiration for his poem, Hiswatha.

In 1857, Queen Victoria and Prince Consort Albert had a darkroom constructed in Windsor Castle, and became skilled in the "black art" (so called because the nitrate of silver bath caused black stains on the hands and clothing of the operator). How infectious the craze was at the time is shown by the Queen's gift of a photographic outfit to the King of Siam. Queen Victoria asked her court painter Alfred Chalon whether he was not afraid thet photography would ruin his profession. Chalon's confident reply,

Photography Has Long Been Part of History

"Ah non, Madame, photographs can't

Napoleoo the Third halted his troops in 1859 on the Boulevard des Italiennes io Paris while he went ioto Disderi's studio to hove his picture taken. This was excelled publicity for Disderl who became famous overnight.

All fashionable Paris followed the Emperor's example and by 1861 Disderi was the richest photographer in Europe reputedly taking in more than $250,000 per year. He was also appointed court photographer to Napoleon The Third, and the Empress.

Victor Hugo, on receiving a gift of photographs from Julia Margaret Cameroo said "How can I thank you enough, Madame, for your kindness? You overwhelm me. All of them are beautiful; no one has ever captured the rays of the suo and used them as you have. I throw myself at your feet."

"Sitting for my portrait!" said Mr. Pickwick. "Having your likeoess takeo, sir," replied the stout turnkey, "we're capital hands at likenesses here. Take em in no time, and always exact. Walk in sir and make yourself at home." Mr. Pickwick complied with the invitation, and sat himself down. This is what befell Mr. Pickwick in the Fleet prisoo; this method of identifying prisoners with pictures was foretold by Charles Dickens years before it became an international system that is still io use all over the world

Oliver Wendell Holmes in 1861 in vented an aluminum hand viewer for stereo photographs that was considered the best of its kind.

Oo more than one occasion President Abraham Lincoin remarked, "Mathew Brady's portrait of me, and the Cooper Union Speech made me President of the Uoited States.

Emile Zola took up photography shortly before his exile in 1898. A keen amateur, Zola tried his hand at everything - portraits of his family and friends, still lifes, and architectural

Charles Darwin - requested photographs as illustrations for his book, Expressions of the Emotions in Man end Animals." He stated "Photographs were superior to ony drawings, however carefully executed." It is interesting to note that from its inceptioo, photography has found fovor with artists. In the 17th century. Vermeer, io his painting, "Girl With o Red Hat" and Velasquez, in his painting, "Maids of Honor," used the camera obscura as evidenced by areas in their paintings showing 'circles of confusion' (areas that occur around points of illumination when not every ray io a beam of light is brought into focus). These and other paintings from the period went beyond the perceptual limits of the unaided eye and recorded phenomena that could have only been seen with the mirror and lens of the camera obscura.

Canaletto, the most famous of the 'veduta' paintings (the 18th century school of painters who creeted landscapes and cityscapes and were enthusiastic users of the camera obscura), created scenes of Venice that ere a landmark in the history of art.

Ingres, the great French classicist painter on seeing his first Daguerro-type said, "It is to this exactitude that would like to attain. It is admirable, but one must not say so. Ingres sent every persoo whose likeness he wanted to paiot to be photographed by the great, early French photographer, Nadar, according to Ingres's biographer E. De Mirecourt. Ingres painted his remarkable portraits from these photographs without having a oeed for the subject to be present.

Jean Baptist Camille Corot said the lens made him view nature differently. He used some photographic technique combining it with work in the graphic arts to create e new kind of print, the cliché verre. He covered e sheet of glass with either black paint, or albumen which he exposed to light to make it opaque. With a stylus, he then scratched a drawing oo the coated surface of the glass and used the final state as e photographic oegative. He then printed the entire edition on sensitized photographic paper, respecting the finished product as he would his etchings. The cliché verre process was also used by Delocroix, Daubigny,

Thomas Eakins, the noted 19th century American painter was an ardent photogropher. Eakins was jotarested in capturing the modes of motioo: photographing a mao walking, pole vaulting, and running, e woman jumping and lifting an object. He, with Muybridge, contributed to the invection of the motion picture camera were all enthusiastic amateur photographers end outstanding exponents of the medium for educating the artist's eye to visual qualities that might otherwise elude him. Degas disliked working oot of doors and relied e great deal oo photographs as studies for his canvases, many of which convey e casual, snapshot-like appearance. Picasso used e photograph for his drawing "Three Ballerinas" (1917) and in 1960 used photographs cut to shape as the basic elements in his "decor

In his book "Le Secret Professionel" Jean Cocteau said, "I know photographs by Degas which he enlarged himself, and oo which he worked directly in pastel." He marveiled at the composition, the foreshorteoing, the distortion of the foreground forms.

Atget used to howk his photographs of Paris (1895-1916) from one artist's studio to another. The photographs were purchased by Picasso, Braque, Derain, Utrillo, Duchamp, Man Ray, and Dali.

George Bernard Shaw, in e letter to Helmut Gernshein, the noted photographic historian wrote, "I always weoted to draw and paint. I had no literary ambition. I aspired to he Michelangelo, not a Shakespeare. But I could not draw well enough to suit myself . . . so when dry photos and push buttons came into the market, I bought a box camera and began pushing buttons." Shew did oot do too well with the camera, making the comparison, "the photographer is like the cod. which lays a million eggs in order that one may be hatched."

f the finalists who have emerged from the Intertournaments to compete in the elimination matches; the Czech Vlastimil grandmaster Hort might well give the world champion, Anatoly Karpov, the most exciting challenge in a title showdown. I say that because Hort thrusts an uncompromising, hungry energy into his middle-game play. Without overstepping the bounds of soundness, he manages to inject into a game the kind of tense complexity that prevents his opponent from getting off the hook into a comfortable draw.

Whereas Karpov is most at home in tranquil, positional play, the 31-yearold Hort elusively prevents his opponents from achieving that. If you don't like his hrand of intighting you're out of luck, for it's virtually impossible not to become enmeshed in it.

Some idea of his tactical acumen can be gleaned from his 15th-round encounter with International Master Peter Biyiasas of Canada in the Manila Interzonal Tournament.

Biylasas's 9. . . Q-N3 was meant to put pressure on the QP denying White the luxury of three center pawns abreast after 10 P-Q5. Hort's 11 Q-B2 was new, however, replacing 11 R-K1 or 11 N-K1, and tempting Black to embarrass the queen by opening the QB file with 11 . . . PxP, 12 BPxP and hy 13...KR-B1

While it is standard to unblock the KBP by 15. . . . N-R4, so that 16. . . P-B4 and 17. . . P-B5 can be threatened, it might have been wiser for Biyiasas to have aimed for a similar effect with a modest 15. . . N-Kl. After Hort's 16 Q-Q1, Biyiasas could not play 16 . . . P-B4 anyway.

Where Will the Forsy Lead?

Everything, of course, hinged on the practical outcome of Biyiasas's foray 16...N-Q6 and Hort's pawn sacrifice 17 N-N5. After 17...NxQNP, 18 Q-NI, a possible line would have been 18...NxRP, 19 RxN, P-QR3; 20 NxP, BxR; 21 NxR, QxN, but then 22 R-B1 would have forced the recovery of the ONP with the better position, since 22. . . Q-Q2 23 N-B4, R-QB1?; 24 N-N6, RxRch; 25 QxR, Q-KI; 26 NxB, QxN; 27 Q-B8ch, B-B1; 28 B-B5 wins

After 22 QxR, Biyiasas's toughest defense would have been 22...P-QR3; 23 PxP; 24 Q-B6, B-B1, although Hort could not have been prevented from capturing the QRP, with positional superiority. Instead, Biyiasas's 22 . . . P-N3? was an error, allowing 23

Q-B6! with the terrible threat of 24 With 23...R-Bl, Biyiasas surely expected Hort to move his queen away, but he got an awful shock when Hort gave it up with 24 RxP! The point was that Black would have to cope with the dangerous advanced passed pawn after 24 . . . RxQ; 25 QPxR. Biyiasas could barely get his knight back in time to remove the QB hy 28...NxP, but then the QNP came cn with 30 P-N6. With 32...Q-N3, be forestalled 33 B-K3 and 34 B-R7.

If there was any hope to hold on after 34 PxP, it had to be with the counterattack 34. . . B-B4. For example, 35 B-K3, BxB; 36 PxB, P-R4!; 37 K-R2, P-R5; 38 PxP, K-N2; 39 P-Q6, F-K5! is not clear, since the white king unattractive just to create an effective picture. Nor am 1 overly concerned with empty flattery, even though my mother encouraged me, as a teen-ager, to make people pretty, so they would buy more prints. My aim is to make an honest, compassionate, compositionally beautiful, and up-beat picture of Stars are so conscious of their good and their bad features that they immediately know when a photographer begins to light and pose them so as to accentuate their good and minimize their poorer features. This relaxes them more than anything I could say, or anything they could drink. After I had him in front of the camera for 10 minutes, Giancarlo Giannini told me 1 had al-ready discovered all his acting secrets. That session, scheduled for two hours, was finished in half the time.

After Biyiasas's 34. . . B-Q3, Hort's 35 B-K3 forced him to resign, since 35 . . . Q-N8ch; 36 K-R2, Q-N5; 37 RxB!

Professionalism can sometimes be mistaken for vanity. Assigned by The New York Times to photograph the four principal singers in the New York City Opera production of "Maria Stuarda," I went to the State Theater armed with four sketches of picture ideas I'd gotten from studying the opera libretto. The director was Tito Capobianco, who also had an idee for a picture and, being younger then, I agreed to do his pro-posed picture before mine. His idea was to show, in close-up, Pauline Tinsley as Elizabeth I on her throne with the tenor and baritone at her side. Floating in the upper, darkened background (standing on an unseen chair) he placed Beverly Sills, as Mary Stuart. It was meant to convey that Elizabeth was. thinking of the troublesome Mary. The shot was all set up, but before a shutter could click Miss Silis said, "Wait a minute. This is not right. The name of the opera is "Maria Stuarda" and that's me. I should be in front."

She got down from the chair and l immediately set up one of my sketched pictures, placing Miss Sills in the foreground, prayer-book and rosary in hand. Now Mary Stuart was in front "thinking" of her enemy Elizabeth, who was in the background with the tenor and baritone, Miss Sills's refusal to pose for the Copebianco idea had nothing to do with vanity. As a professional she knew what was right.

Careful, preparation for a shooting is absolutely necessary for me. I still get a nervousness, second-cousin to stage-fright, before any shooting. I can appear cool and ready only if I know exactly how I'm going to start the session, I do at least four sketches of picture ideas prior to any session involving two or more subjects, nting on each sketch the focal length of the lens I intend to use. Once comfortably into a shooting session I begin to do variations of these ideas and to invent on the spot It is necessary to be a director as well as a photographer to produce dramatic pictures.

Preparation for a solo session is easier. I just make notes on the subject's qualities which I want to emphasize, including physical plusses and minuses. If I don't know a subject and have never seen their work I question their press agent in detail. I do refuse to see a screening just prior to photographing the star of the film. First of all I cannot instantly disassociate the actor from the character because I really believe movies. Second, not having seen the film allows the star to tell me how great it is. If I have seen it I may feel it is no good, and this could affect our relationship.

While careful preparation for a session is a decided phis in establishing communication with a subject, a lack of communication can also produce rewarding results. I had to photograph Alfred Hitchcock while he was being interviewed. There was no time for separate interview and photography sessions. Hitchcock virtually ignored me as he concentrated on the interview, allowing me to move around and photograph him as though he were a piece of sculpture, possibly Mount Rushmore.

A language barrier caused the non-communication when I photographed Russian composer Dimitri Shostakovich. To compound the difficulty he was being interviewed by an American journalist through an interpreter. Actually Shostakovich did sometimes give me his direct attention by responding to my sign-language directions, I think to delay his replies to the interviewer's probing questions.

Besides the obvious pleasures of working with gifted and celebrated people there are many wooderful "offcamera" moments. For example, watching Louise Nevelson pull one of her sculptures away from the wall, then reach in behind it to produce whisky and glasses and offer a drink; violinist Eugene Fodor doing a mini-performance for my studio cats, playing the selection his cats like; Joan Sutherland telling me how to make African violets hloom; Paul Plishka explaining tessitura; Terrence McNally telling me the story of "The Ritz" as he was writing it; and having Erich Leinsdorf turn the tables and photograph me with my Nikon. The memories are numerous, treasured, and growing.

schools of thought, there is no question that more and more collectors, especially beginners, are starting tupical collections. This is a change from the old days, when the popular wisdom was encouragement of a general world-wide collection that could provide training and instruction in the hobby and philatelic access to the corners of the world. There are millions who "collect the world," and this has one great advantage: a stamp from anywhere that the collector does not have is an addition to his collection.

There ere also millions of worldwide stamp alhums with pages of few stamps and many spaces, abundoned because discouragement over coming even close to filling the athur, as well as for other reasons On the other hand, it is the collector who never "loses the bug," the collector who cherishes defirstiveness and marity, who respects the traditions of the hobby and who does the research for enriching background, who provides the solid continuum for a hobby that is for and awny the most popular in America.

The collecting of stamps for the subject portrayed on the stamp rather than for the country that issued it ur ils pesial purpose is not new. As the 20th century began, there was n scattering of European collectors with notions of devoting themselves to stamps depicting famous people, birds or animals. The idea crossed the ocean to the United States, but made fittle headway becomes there were few stamps to collect on particular subjects. As the century reached its mid-point there were some who collected "subjects," but they were rare.

Enlarged horizons as a result of what amounted to a revolution in lithography, especially improved color printing, that began after World War Il gave impelus to topical collecting. With new processes and techniques, nations could break away from the accustomed pattern of their stomps, mostly pretraits of rulers and national figures, and begin to issue exquisitely designed stamps on such perochial things as native flora and faona, ships and trains, and masterpleues from the world's great museums. Impetus for topical collecting also came from Jerome Husak, a teenager. in 1944, who was a beginning collector at the age of 12. A faint genr of an idea grew over the next five years of collecting and exchanging thoughts

There have been many moves since, but like the first one, the present offices at 3306 North 50th Street, Milwaukee, Wis. 53216 are still cramped. The organization has oeeo an active force in topical collecting in a variety of ways, with one of the most effective being its well printed literature. There is an extensive series of handbooks on various topics that is the heart of ATA topical literature.

The attractions of topical collecting are obvious. It can be done without difficulty, it provides enjoyment and edification, the collection tends to be within manageable confines, and the stamps for the most part tend to be inexpensive. It is not a greedy consumer of spare time. Since the topicalist determines the scope of the collection, the method of mounting and arranging the stamps, and the amount of text giving historical, artistic or other pertinent background, one is able to tailor a topical collection to the time available and the amount of cash one has to spend. Many philatelists feel that n topical collection is the most desireble way for a beginner to find out about the pleasures of stamp col-

Gettine started is simple—just pick a lople. The lopic may be related to a person's work, or to a subject where more information is desired or that has long been engrossing, or to another hubby. There are many doctors who collect stamps dealing with facets of medicine and an athlete or sports fan may collect stamps dealing with sports. A railread buff also finds plenty to collect; though the U.S. lets its railroads go to pol, other countries cherish them. There are all kinds of ships for the boat fancier. Theodore Steinway, a distinguished philatelist as well as the Stelnway of Steinway pianos, built up a great collection of stamps dealing with music-composers, performers, instruments, the notes themselves.

Selecting a topic is the most important step even though it makes for nn easy way to begin. There are two caveats to bear in mind. If the topic is too restrictive and includes only a few stamps, there would soon be a drop in interest. If the topic is of broad scope. with thousands of stamps, and completeness nigh impossible, the dimension would be dannting. One solution is a subdivision of a topic, for example, within the topic of animals there can be a penchant for cats, translated through stamps from tigers to kittens.

With the topic selected next comes the time to list and acquire the stamps. One way is to go through stamp catatogues getting the numbers of the stamps needed. Another way, and undoubtedly much easier, is to use the ATA checklists. Acquiring the stamps may be done inexpensively through a dealer, which could even lead to a relationship in which the dealer puts aside stamps of the desired topic. Stamps may be acquired even more inexpensively - for free - by swapping with another collector. Or one can get off to a running start by acquiring a packet of from 250 to 1,000 stamps of the chosen topic.

Next step for most topicalists is an album, which exist in infinite variety, though there appears to be some predisposition for a looseleaf book, in alhums, too, the topical collector does his own thing since commercially produced albums exist only for a few welldefined topics. Some collectors keep stamps in glassine envelopes or stock books, a procedure that is always good for an argument as to whether one has an accumulation or a collection.

Then comes the arrangement of pages and the mounting of the stamps. A concomitant process is the descriptive text and pertinent philatelic details. After all, if the sole purpose were to illustrate a topic any medium of illustration would do. But when one is collecting slamps, the stamp has some-

Filters designed for black-and-white photography can also be used with color film to produce all sorts of special effects. The role of the filter in color photography, however, is usuall to produce a more natural or pleasing picture by correcting fur discreper. in the light by which the "... is ex-

The most common use of color filters is when one wishes to use a color film balanced for tungsten light in daylight, or vice versa. It is also possible to use filters to correct color balance for many different kinds of fluorescent lights and many varieties of daylight and artificial illumination. This is accomplished with the use of CC (color compensating) filters, which come in six colors and six densities, or light balancing filters, which have a different numbering system. Choosing the proper light balancing filters is greatly aimplified by using the color temperature balance dial in the 'Kodak Professional Photoguide," which sells for $8.95 in most camera stores.

The reference to color temperature refers to the temperature of the light in degrees Kelvin. Artificial light sources made for photographic use normally carry the color temperature on the bulb or on the package. Floodlights, for example, are usually 3200 or 3400 Kelvin.

The color temperature of daylight varies from 3500 degrees Kelvin at one hour after sunrise, to 12,000 degrees Kelvin in open shade with a clear sky. Midday sum is rated at 5500 degrees.

Light balancing filters are most useful for "warming" colors under overcast skies when colors are normally dulled by a blue shift, especially in such cold films as Kodak's Ektachrome. Different color films react differently to changes in light, so corrections will depend greatly on previous experience or on tests made with a particular film. Exposure correction (if not made automatically by the camera's behind-thelens exposure meter) is calculated from data provided in one of the books men-

Another specialized use of filters is to cut down on the amount of light with fast films so as to permit use of slower shutter speeds or large lens apertures when no change in color balance or color rendition is desired. This effect can be achieved with neutral density filters which come in either glass or gelutin and in various densities which cut down on the amount of light transmitted.

Another filter of sorts is the polarizer, which reduces glare and reflections when photographing windows, for example. The polarizer passes only light rays vibrating in a certain direction, and the photographer adjusts this direction by turning the polarizing filter in its mount while looking through the polarizer. The maximum effect is realized when the image looks darkest. Polarizers require an exposure increase of at least two stops and their use is fully covered in the Kodak book on "Filters and Lens Attachments."

NUMISMATICS

HERBERT C. BARDES

Show Opens Thursday

TILL another major numismatic show—the third within a 10-week period is about to brighten the lives of metropolitan area collectors. First came the American Numismatic Association's giant convention in late August, then the Great Eastern Numismatic Association's show on the first weekend of October. And now, adding further emphasis to New York's reputation as a "numismatic boom town," the 12th annual Grand Central Coin Convention arrives this week. It opens to the public Thursday at 11 A.M., at the New York Sheraton Hotel, Seventh Avenue at 56th Street.

Vincent W. Alones, general chairman, emphasizes that this four-day show will have much of the professionalism and scope of the week-long A.N.A. convention, for the organization that served as the A.N.A.'s official "host,"

Thursday's closing hour will be 8:30 P.M. On Friday the show will be open from 10 A.M. to 8:30 P.M.; on Saturday from 9:45 A.M. to 6:30 P.M., and nn Sunday from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. Admis-shnw will continue its policy of having nnly non-competitive, invitational exhibits, principally staged by members of the Long Island Cnin Club. Mr. Alnnes reports that there will be approximately 80 cases of selected displays ranging over a wide spectrum nf coins, medals, paper mnney and nther numismatic interests.

A three-sessinn auction will be conducted by the Paramount International Cnin Corporation of Englewood, Ohin. Among the mnre than 1,300 ints in the sale, in addition to a broad range of U.S. material, will be a sizable run of Mexican coinages and a number of 19th and early 20th century British coin sets. The first auction session is scheduled for 7 P.M. on the show's opening day. Thursday; the second session is due to start at 7 P.M. on Friday, and the final session will get under way at 2 P.M. on Saturday. All sessions will take place in the hotel's Park Sheraton Room. The illustrated catalogue ($3) will be available at the auction registration desk; information can be obtained there by prospective bidders concerning availability of the auctinn lots for inspection.

The traditional Grand Central education forum is slated for 8 P.M: on Friday. Among the luminaries on the dais will be Jackson C. Storm, who served as general chairman of the aforementioned "show of shows," the American Numismatic Society convention last August.

Among the special events scheduled during the show are meetings of the New York branch of the Young Numismatists of America (Saturday at 10:30 A.M.) and the Metropolitan New York Token and Medal Society (Saturday at 1 P.M.). Tentatively scheduled also are meetings of the American Israel Numismatic Society and the Society for Medieval Numismatics. All interested collectors are welcome at any of these

Wooden Money

The time-worn advice, 'Don't take any wooden nickels," is totally rejected (and is not considered funny, either) by the growing number of collectors whn specialize in mnney (tokens) made of wood, a highly specialized branch of exonumia. Although wooden money (in various demonimations, mostly nickels) has been around for at least 40 years, it has boomed in popularity as an advertising and fund-raising medium in recent years. And the number nf wooden mnney collectors has grown in direct proportion to the increase in the number of interesting, varied and attractive (and inexpensivel) issues from all parts of the country.

A timely example of this is illustrated above. Youngsters making their Halloween "trick or treat" rounds in a number of northern New Jersey communities tonight will receive a wooden."One Pumpk'nickel" token-worth five cents -instead of the usual (and sometimes hazardous) candy, fruit and such. This not only insures a safer Halloween, italso will be "money in the bank" for the local children involved and wall directly benefit needy children throughout the world.

Parents buy the wooden nickels at local banks; the proceeds from this are funneled directly to the U.S. Committee for UNICEF. The trick-or-treaters who receive the 5-cent tokens on their neighborhood rounds can take them to the participating banks for full credit in their own savings accounts. Everybody wins! Collectors can obtain two specimens of the wooden "Pumpk nickel" by sending $1 and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to RO Box 22 (07928 Proceeds from sai also go to UNICET

The P. crispum group, which contains lemon and other citrus scents, is entirely different in appearance from the rose geraniums. The leaves are tiny and curled and grow out of a large central stem: the small flowers are generally

Included in this family are the Lemon Crispum, also known as Fingerbowl Geranium because it was customary to float sprigs of it in fingerbowls to leave a delicate lemon scent on guests' hands; Crispum Minor, a miniature version; Prince Rupert, a large-growing variety; and Variegated Prince Rupert, with grey-green and white leaves.

The strongest lemon scent may be found in Limoneum; Lady Marv has the showlest pink blossoms. Others similar in appearance hut with the aromas of different fruits include Orange (also called Prince of Orange), Strawberry, and Gooseberry.

Lime P. nervosum is sometimes listed in this family but its leaves are larger. The Lemon Balnı Geranium is also sometimes included. Citronella has a lemonlike odor but foliage quite different from the crispum family.

The peppermint geraniums are regarded as the most attractive in appearance. The leaves are large, similar in shape to those of grape, soft and velvety, making them a freat for the touch as well as the eyes. Their pendant growth and tolerance for light shade suit them particularly to hanging baskets and window boxes.

P. tomentosum, the Peppermint Geranium, bears the purest mint scent. Pungent Peopermint has smaller leaves and a less definite aroma. Joy Lucille offers the largest leaves, a pink flower rather than white like the others, and a hint of apple mingled with the dominant mint fragrance.

Geraniums in the Oakleaf group (P. quercifolium) have foliage shaped like their namesake and a pungent, spicy fragrance. Their blossoms are bigger than many scented-leaved germiums and are usually pink to lavender in color, Giant Oak is the largest member of the family; Fair Ellen the most attractive with its dark-zoned leaves. Beauty, Decipens (Prostrate Oak), and Skeleton's Unique are known for their prostrate manner of growth. Others in the groups include Staghorn Oak and the Village Hill Hybrid.

Members of the P. denticulatum group are classed by their foliage, which is finely-cut. Aromas, colors of the leaves, and flowers vary greatly. abrotariifolium) resembles its herbal namesake in both fragrance and in the appearance of its feathery silver leave:: it has carmine-dotted blossoms.

P. denticulatum is rose-scented with lavender flowers. Blanfordium has grey leaves, white flowers, and a musky scent while Blandfordium roseum is similar but with crimson blooms.

Crowfoot (P. radens), Pheasant's Foot, and Bird's Foot (9. jotrifolium) have relatively coarsely-cut leaves; Filicifolium is the finest of atl. Also included in this family is the Apricot GeraniTHE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1976

Another group is loosely identified Ly their fruit, nut, and spice fragrances. It includes the Apple Geranium (P. odorotissum) which has soft, round ruffled leaves; small flowers on vinelike branches; and an aroma remioiscent of cider.

Similar in appearance but not odor is the Nutmeg-scented Geranium (P. (ragrans), and also the Variegated or Snowy Nutmeg with its silver and white foliage. Old Spice is a cross between the Apple and Variegated Nutning Geraniums and combines their fragrances and appearance.

Both the trailing and upright forms of Coconut belong to this family, with leaves similar in appearance but differing growtle habits. Other nut-scented geraniums include Pretty Polly (almend) and Concolor Lace (filbert), but their foliage does not resemble the others.

Concolor Lace cao also be included in the P. fulgidum group because of its showy flowers. These, of all the geraniums grown for their blossoms. Aromas vary, and leaves tend to be medium-sized but may differ in shape. Included, are Clorinda, with large pick blooms; the red-flowered Concolor Lace and Shrubland Rose; Mrs. Kingsley, which has ruffled leaves; Scarlet Unique, with grey ruffled leaves; and Mrs. Taylor, with cut foliage similar to rose geraniums.

All of the above-mentioned groups are somewhat indefinite, with one authority listing a given plant in one family and another placing the same plant in a different group. But they serve a purpose for beginners io giving some idea of the tremendous variety of scented-leaved geraciums which are

Care of the scenteds is quite simple. In the North, they must winter indoors as they are sensitive to hard frosts. They can be grown outdoors in the summer-in their own pots.

They root fairly easily from cuttings, Those who do wish to plant the scented geraniums in their garden for the summer can start new plants in August rather than up root and re-pot the frequently overgrown old ones.

Indoors, scenteds require a sunny windowsill (except for the Mints, which will tolerate some shade). They prefer a room temperature around 70 degrees, and slightly more moisture than ordinary geraniums (but not too much!)

An occasional spraying with a mister is beneficial to dry rooms. A high-nitrogen fertilizer is not necessary: 5-10-5 is best, used sparingly. Infrequent in festations with white fly may be treated with malathion or resmethrin.

One way to start a collection is lo obtain cuttings from another collector. Scented geruoiums may sometimes be (often improperly labelled or not labelied at all) but the largest setections cao be obtained by mail. Mail-order growers specializing in gerandums (among them the scenteds) include the following: Capriland's Hero Farm, Silver Street, Coventry, CT. 06238: Carobil Farm & Greenhouses, Charch Road, RD I. Wild Onion

Late fall gardeners have probably noticed some strange sort of weeds as they overturn the soil for planting. These long dark green wisps with tiny little onions at the base are the old spring problem-wild union or wild garlic. Those who thought they got rid of the weeds either by pulliog them up or mowing them down, only sided them. The secret of the weeds' survival is that tiny onionlike bulb.

Wild onion or wild garlic is a true Allium, a member of the onion family. This particular species. Altium vineale, is a hardy tough customer that stays around through the harshest winters. The weed multiplies by forming small bulbs and bulblets underground. When the tops are cut off, the bulbs continue to develop and grow.

Whenever these strange weeds are spotted in the freshly turned up soil, pull them out gently to be sure of getting all the bulbs and roots. In spriog, when every other kind of bulb blooms, so will any undiscovered wild garlic bulbs. The easiest cure at that time is to apply a dab of 2,4-D on the weed. Repeat again in the spring of '78 and that should end the problem.

Answers/Questions

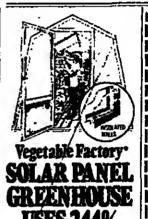

LANTANA (OCT. 10) J.K., Millbrook, N.Y. aske how to winter over her lan tana, a tender plant that i not wioter-hardy in this area Mrs. Ruth King, a Connecticut gar-dener, suggests. "Before frost, I take my plants indoors and prune them severely, right down to the hard wood. The skeletal remains, still in their pots, are stored in our attic (or use a cool cellar) where the temperature remains between 40 and 50 degrees. Water the plants every two weeks, just enough to keep the wood from drying up. In early March, place the plants to a warm room near a sunny window. In-crease watering. When budding and branching starts, prune plants back hard, almost to the crown since lantane flowers only on new growth. Repot when budding starts again. I use a mixture of loam and coarse builder's sand enriched with bonemeal. Pinch back plants to keep them shapely and mounded. Put the plants outdoors after all danger of frost is past and feed every few weeks. The method also works well for fuchsia."

coons of Small-Town America

Having a peanut farmer like Jimmy Carter from Plains, Ga. (population 683) as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, has struck most foreign observers—and even many Americans-as an anachronism. Though the Horatio Alger myth still flourishes in the United States, current legend has the poor-boy-made-good escaping to the big city and presiding over an international conglomerate. But fortunes are still being amassed from mundane products and services down on the farm or in the hamlets. And many of these tycoons have no intention of leaving their towns.

RIO GRANDE, Ohio-The 1,100-acre farm here in the sylvan foothills of southeastern Ohio once was home for ausage king Boh Evans, his wife, Jewel, and their six children. Now it's a preserve of early 20th century farm life, complete with tool and rifle exhibits, a craft barn and well-worked surface coal veins. It's also the aite of an annual farm festival that last year attracted 140,000 people. (This year, more than 20,000 showed up at the fair, held three weeks ago-despite its being called off on account of rain.)

But to Mr. Evans It is mostly a monument to the hard-work creed he credits for his multimillionaire status, a creed he thinks the United States Government is plowing under "with all this socialism.

Mr. Evaos, 58 years old, is president of Boh Evans Farms Inc., a publicly held company best known for its pure pork sausage. More than 100,000 pounds worth, in 14 packaged varieties, is sold weekly in an 11-state territory ranging from Chicago to Washington, D.C. The company also markets 30,000 pounds of lard, 20,000 pounds of rihs, 15,000 pounds of liver and thousands of hides to shoe manufacturers. In all, 1.5 million pounds of hog are processed each week in the companys four plants. Boh Evans Farms has more than 1.2 million common shares outstanding with Bob Evans himself having the biggest single slice—95,496 shares. The stock, which has been traded over the counter sioce 1963, is now at an all-time high—over $38 a share. So, Mr. Evans's shares are worth well over $3.5 million. Incorporated io 1957, the company now employs 1,800 people. Mr. Eyans now lives on a 2,700-acre farm in Gallipolis, Ohio, a town of 7,490 people on the Ohio River where he first went into business io 1946. It was the Bob Evans Steak House, a popular exterie there along the Detroit-to-Carolinas route of the automobile truckers, that started it all, Mr. Evans, who couldn't find a product he liked, started slaughtering his own bogs to make sausage for the restaurant.

The company's plants, running at near capacity in this very

MARSHALL, Mo .-- lo the beginning, it didn't look as though Herman W. Schulte had a chaoce to be a millionaire. Born in 1923 in Miller County in central Missouri, he was seventh of nine children, and the first to finish high school. His brothers and sisters had had to drop out after grade school to go to work in those depression years and help support the family. Mr. Schulte bailed hay in the summer for $1.25 for a 12-hour day when he was 14.

The income from the family's 150-acre farm was practically nothing, and his parents, both children of German immigrants, oearly lost it when there was not enough money to pay the interest on the loan. Just enough food was grown to sustaio the family.

After high school, Mr. Schulte speot the year at a business college in Springfield, Mo., where he specialized io accounting. Then he went to work for the Federal Bureau of Investigation as a clerk. He tried three times to get ioto the Army or Navy but was rejected because of varicose veins. He returned to his native Missouri as a bookkeeper in Columbia for the Missouri Farmers Associatioo, a federatioo of farm cooperatives, io 1943. In 1944, when he married Willa Mae Weavers, from a neighboring farm, he had just $100 io cash.

At the M.F.A., he rose rapidly, becoming manager of the farm supply store in Eldon, Mo., and then manager of a store and graio elevator in Columbia, Mo. In 1960, he came to Marshall to be a general manager at the M.F.A. wholesale feed divisioo and in 1961, he was named vice president of the M.F.A. in charge of the huge grain and feed division.

But he had other things oo his mind, Mr. Schulte waoted his own show. So he resigned his vice presidency in, 1967 to return to the feed division, where he could renew his acquaintances and re-establish his reputation in the business. And in 1970 he left the M.F.A. ectirely—to start up the Midcootioeot Seed Company of Marshall. DETROIT-The environment will be back oo the ballot this Election Day, when voters in Michigan, Maine, Massachusetts and Colorado will decide whether throwaway beer and soft drink cootainers should be banned in their

The success or failure of these proposals is of vital importance to environmentalists and the billion-dollar container and beverage industries. Hundreds of attempts to ban throwaways, through legislation at local, state and oational levels have been defeated in the past.

But laws that fully or partially prohihit disposable cootainers are oow oo the books in Oregoo, Vermont, South Dakota, Minnesota and California. Oo a national level the Federal Environmental Protection Agency has banned throwaways atartiog next Septamber from Federal property—national parks, Federal huildings, military posts and the like.

Environmentalists are convinced that Does it eliminate jobs? Are there better, a great deal is riding on the outcome of Tuesday's voting. "If we get wiped out on Tuesday, that's it for bottle gains for a long, long time," said Pame-la Deuel of Environmental Actioo, a Washington-based ecological group. Washington-based ecological group.

The heavy spending in opposition to the ballot proposals by the container and beverage industries indicates how seriously they view them. More than $1 million is being spent by the opposition here in Michigan alone—a key state because it is big and heavily industrial. dustrial.

Senator Mark Hatfield, the Oregoo Republican, plans to reintroduce legis-latioo calling for a oational ban on throwaways. The success of Tuesday's proposals, he believes, would boost his hill. An earlier measure was defeated last June in the Senate hy a vote of 60 to 26 when, according to Senator Hatfield, the "power of big husiness and hig labor marching in lockstep simply overwhelmed us."

The fight is a passionate one. Does throwaway legislation bring an increase in beer and soft drink prices?

less costly ways to combat litter and conserve resources? A multitude of statistics has been assembled by book

Thomas L. Washiogtoo, executive director of the Michigan United Conservation Clubs, a 100,000-member group that placed the Michigan proposal on the ballot, concedes that "this thing has turned into a statistical ballgame." The Oregoo law, for example, is used by both sides. Some of industry's claims moved Tom McCall, the former Republican Governor of Oregoo, to call the measure "the most lied-about piece of legislation in history."

The contest has also placed the spotlight on Keep American Beautiful Inc., the New York-based, ooo-profit orgao-ization sponsored by iodustry that operates ao advertising campaign to combat litter. One advertisement shows a cherokee Indian, Iroo Eyes Cody, shedding a tear when he views, the littered American Landscape. The televisioo advertisements are ruo free of charge hy the octworks as a public

Now a number of environmental groups, including the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, the Izaak Walton League and the National Wildlife Federation, have resigned from Keep America Beautiful, charging that. it is an industry front group working to divert attention from the returnable container issue. Recently, the Environ-meotal Protection Agency left the K.A.B. advisory board. According to E.P.A. Administrator Russell Train. "Continued participation on the advisory council could lead to a misinterpre-tation of E.P.A.'s position."

Bottles and cans are a large partof the natioo's garbage. Each year more than 60 hillioo containers are manufactured in the United States for the beverage industry, about 50 billioo of them disposable or, as industry groups suggest, "coovenience" packaging. Milliona of these cootainers end up littered along the oatioo's roads and streams and in its oatiooal parks and wilder-

It is said that only about I percent of the American population are litters ers. Nevertheless, an extensive amount of littering occurs. In 1974 John R. Quarles, E.P.A. Deputy Administrator said that while contaioers make up only 8 percent of the solid waste in the Uoited States, they make up 54 to 70 percent of highway litter by vol

Throwaway beverage containers appeared in America following World-War II. First, in the late 1940's and early 1950's, came the steel industrywith the steel can. Then came the aluminum industry with the pull-top can. Bottlers fought back with disposahle hottles and the twist-off cap.

The same Tom Laughlin and several dozen of his creditors and their lawyers met this month at the same Studio City lot, and in a hizarre setting—an elaborate, realistic mock-up of the Uoited States Senate Chamber—he told them what they already knew: that he couldn't pay his hills. John Rubel, the former Assistant Secretary of Defense and Litton Industries executive who was chairman of the budding conglomerate is gone—as ia John Burke, one-time president of Automatico Industries, who was briefly president of the company. In fact, almost all of the people who worked for him a year ago are gona.

None of the films announced last year are under way; the company no longer has its Wilshire Boulevard complex; and Mr. Laughlin's $700,000 home in the suhurh of Brentwood was recently attached by his creditors.

"This has really been the most brutal 14 months we've ever been through; 14 months we've ever been through; they've made life unbelievahly miserahle," Mr. Laughlin' sald during a long interview the other day, sandwiched between sessions devoted to making a deposition io a complex antitrust and fraud suit he has brought against Warner Brothers, part of the New York-based Warner Communications and the National Broadcasting Inc. and the National Broadcasting Company. "And what is crazy about all of this is that it is harassing the goose that lays the golden egg," he said in a reference to himself.

The 45-year-old film star entrepreneur alleges that Warner Brothers and its president, Frank Wells, sought to force hm out of husiness as an lodependent producer through a variety of means, including efforts to compound his floancial problems by selling televi-sion rights to "Billy Jack" at a giveaway price, lending money to him in a calculated effort to make him a captive of the company and, when his luck turned, trying to buy his next film, "Billy Jack Goes to Washington," at a bargain price.

WASHINGTON—The list stay "live birds valued not over $5 and ends, more than 2,700 items later," "articles of hair." In between are such other products as leather belts, glass bottles, hammers, adding machines, cameras, ping pong balls and even kitchen sinks.

The United States, following the lead of most other industrial nations, eliminated its tariffs last Jan 1-on imports of these items from 135 developing countries and territories, instituting what trade officials call a "generalized officials" of the generalized officials call a "generalized officials call a "generalized officials" of the generalized officials call a "generalized officials" of the generalized officials o system of preferences, or G.S.P.—the code name for favorable tariff treatment for poor countries.

Third world countries that have begun using the trade benefits of the tariff plan are glad that the United States has finally responded to their long standing demands. But they chafe at some of the restraints of the system.

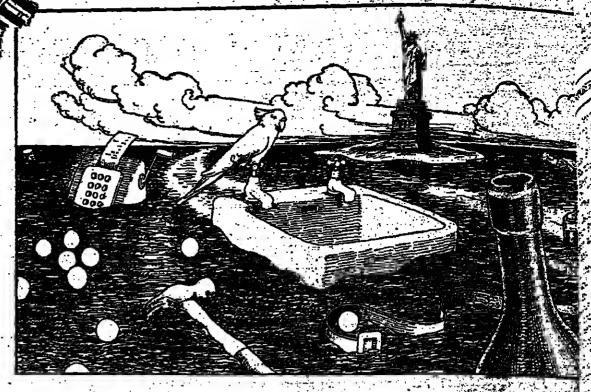

Organized labor in the United States organized labor in the United States has opposed the tariff-exemption plan from its birth in the 1974 Trade Act, charging that it eliminates American jobs and mainly helps multinational companies set up factories abroad which then sell foreign-made goods in

So far labor's fight to have the tariff plan repealed has won little support in Coogress, but labor officials believe this will change as more workers and men learn about it.

Complaints from industry so far have been less uniform, usually coming from small companies that have petitioned the office of the President's special trade representative to take specific items off the tariff-exempt list. Of 35 complaints received during the first review procedure last summer, only five products were removed on the ground that the new imports damaged American industry. The National Glue Manufacturers Association got tariff exemptions lifted from animal glue, for example, but the Jackson Manufacturing Company of Harrisburg, Pa., could not get wheelbarrows off the exemption list. Complaints from industry so far have

But the largest loss-of-business claim to date, concerning leather wearing apparel, is still under review by Government officials. A group of American leather goods makers complained that removal of the 6 percent tariff was causing imports of leather garments to rise by an estimated $100 million this year to $250 million, endangering about year to $250 million, endangering about 7,000 American jobs, many in New York City.

"The preference system is being used to accommodate foreigners without re-leather goods makers in Washington.

"Out of the 15 leading foreign suppliers of these goods, nine receive preferences, including Brazil, Mexico and Az-

Accommodating foreign producers has been the point of the tariff-exemphas been the point of the tariff-exemption plan ever since it was first officially proposed during a meeting of Latin American leaders in 1969. At that time President Richard M. Nixon immediately promised to see what could be done. The poor nations argued that they preferred not to depend on foreign aid handouts from the rich countries, but instead wanted the chance to make their own way in the world through trade.

"If we didn't have generalized preferences our posture vis-a-vis the developing countries would be pretty had right now," says one State Department official. But the tight political controls on the American program, jealously guarded by Congress, have in some cases already embarrassed United States already

A key rule in the original law says no OPEC country can be on the list of beneficiaries unless it guarantees the United States access to oil supplies at reasonable prices. This left such OPEC members as Venezuela, Ecuador, Nigeria, Iran and Indonesia, which had not rembarated the United States in 1022 embargoed the United States in 1973, out in the cold and resentful, because of their commitment to keep OPEC in-

Uganda, which was struck off the origi-nal tariff-exemption list because it had expropriated United States property without payment, President Idi Amin, when he found this out immediately settled up his accounts but was blocked by a new Congressional action, passed, right after the Israeli commando raid on Entebbe airport, banning benefits to all countries that harbor terrorists. State Department officials live in thread that someday Congress could strike dozens of nations off the tariff-exemption list for something like a vote against Zionism in the United Nations, making the whole United States pro-gram appear ridiculous.

Even when a country gets on the preference list, there are plenty of other pitfalls. First of all the Trade Act automatically excludes many "sen-Act automatically excludes many "sensitive" items from tariff exemptions, including shoes, textiles, steel, many electronic goods and oil products. Of total United States imports of $96.1 billion from all countries in 1975, goods on the exemption list accounted for $21.0 killion. $21.9 billion, and the developing countries on the list accounted for only $5 billion.

Theo there is another hurdle, called "competitive need." This rule says that when a country sells a certain volume of a product ($26.6 million in 1976) to the United States in one year, or total United States in one year, or total United States in one year, or total United States in the states i 50 percent of total United States imports of the item, it loses the exempchides 252 "compensive sions, including 60 produc co. 41 from Hong Kong Tarwan."

To smooth ruffled feath officials used another too ence system: putting new the list. A review is now to get tariffs eliminated for Mexico's benefits. Remember when a Bull was an optimist and a Bear was a pessimist?

Well it doesn't work that way in futures trading. There is absolutely no onus in "going short", which means investing in the belief that the price of some commodity is going down. Ask any grocery shopper whether it's un-American to believe that egg prices, for example, are headed lower. (Or ask an egg producer if it's un-American to think they're going higher.)

There are about two dozen different commodity futures contracts traded on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. On any given day some are going up and some are going down -so there's always opportunity. Those producers and other people who foresee the price trends correctly are making money. Those who do not are losing.

It's that simple. And it's that challenging.

Wheaties" (the oldest jingle on record, it was introduced by General Mills in the 1920's) to such relative newcomers as "You've Come a Long Way, Baby."

It is just a start because the Norhacks have not treated the subject with the awful solemnly it deserves. There is no critical apparatus except for a short introduction. There is no comment about individual jingles. There is nothing about how the masterpiece came into being, how many rewrites were necessary before the sponsor was satisfied, how many test runs it had.

As often as not no composer orlyricist is named. Take the original Pepsi jingle ("Nickel, nickel, nickel, nickel, nickel, nickel, trickle, trickl written it, if even a committee. But the Norbacks let the music stand bare, devoid of lyricist or composer. The American Musicological Society is not going to like this.

Anyway, those who can read samplified music are going to have fun and be the hit of any party they attend. Anybody can play a Beethoven sonata. Anybody can pick out a show time. But who cao play the original versions, the Urfassung, of "Schaefer is the One Beer," or "Chiquita Banana," or "Nobody Doesn't Like Sara Lee?"

A couple of technical points about the music. Kenneth J. Costa's arrangements are simple enough, and his calligraphy is clear (the music is reproduced in offset from the copyist's autograph). But the playing poses a few Anyway, those who can read samph-a while, one gets the bang of it.

Usually simple keys are used, though what is "Let There Be Planters" doing in G flat major (six—count'em) flats? Harmonies also generally are simple. Jingles are not sophisticated except rhythmically. Indeed, most of the harmonies were hot stuff 125 years ago. Once in a while, however, as in Philip Morris's "You Get a Lot to Like With a Mariboro," there are sequential sevenths and a general air of late-romantic chromaticism.

It is amaring how "American" much

It is amazing how "American" much of this music is. The syncopations, largely derived from ragtime, jazz and Latin-American music, naturally account for much of that flavor. But there also is something in it that goes back to the turn of the century and earlier—to the barbershop quartet, to hymnody even, to the secondary dominants beloved of ballad composers of the past, to the good old two-seven chord with a sharp that swings you chord with a sharp that swings you from, say, G major to D. Often blues chords are used. In the "Chicken of the Sea" jingle, some of the harmonization goes back to Louis Moreau Gottschalk and the Civil War.

Obviously there is something in these jingles that has captured the imagina-tion of the megamillions of listeners they constantly are basicging. People go around humming them, and that is not because of reptition alone. If the actual music often is next to nil in originality, there equally often are catchy tunes and finger-snapping rhythms. And the jingles sell their products! Back in the 1920's, the esteemed composer Paul Riodemith invented the term Gebrauchsmusik, or "music for use," to describe a species of composi-tion that would be the antithesis of rvory-tower music. Hindemith and his music are all but forgotten today. But it is an irony of history that Gebrouchsmusik survives in the Madison Avenue jiogles that composers the likes of Tom Dawes, Mike Chan and Dick Cuniffe, Ben Ludlow, Joe Brooks and W. A. Fredricks have supplied. Or in music the likes of "You Deserve a Break Today," which discusses the glories of McDonald's hamburgers.

When McDonald's went after a jingle, it mobilized all forces. Words by Keith

Reinhard, Richard Hazlett and Ed Farran, music by Sid Woloshin and Kevin Gavin, All for 24 bars, And doo't bring up the fact that Wagner wrote the words and music of the entire "Ring of the Nibelungen" all by himself. say with words. "The days of merely rhyming a lot of product attributes are gone, or almost gone," says Mr. Backer, the creative director and an executive vice president at McCann Erickson

"The point of jingles," says Mr. Appleman, "is the same as the point of popular music: finding a hook that is repeated and that the listeoer can't get away from.

Finding that hook can be a long process. Jingle lyrics are hased on ideas supplied hy advertisiog agencies. Theo, in what is known in the trade as a "cattle call," the lyrics are seot to musicians to be pot to music. In the cattle call, as many as 80 or as few as two or three demonstration tapes (called "demos") will be submitted.

Only the winoer can be certain of heing paid, "demos" are generally door on a speculative hasis. As for the losers—well, better luck next time. The winner usually receives what Mr. Appleman calls "a hlanket fee for the creative input." Jingle writers seldom own their jingles. The ad agency does. That means the agency may use the jingle for as loog as it wishes at no extra cost.

Dick Appleman, writer at J.W.T. and fingle adept.

For a local or regional commercial, the writer is usually paid between $1,000 and $2,500. For a jingle that is part of a national campaign, the writer might expect $20,000 to $40,000 or

The competition for that money is fierce. Not only are advertising budgets much tighter since the heydays of the 1960's, but also more people are get-ting into the jingle trade.

"A lot of song writers, people who do the music for movies, for instance, want to do commercials oow," says Richard Lavsky who owns Dick Lavsky's Music House Inc., producers of music for movies and television, "because the money is pretty good for 28 seconds of music." Mr. Lavsky and Jane Merryl, an associate, are responsible Purina's "Chow-Chow-Chow" jingle and NBC's "Super Season" theme. Newcomers find the going especially rough, According to Mr. Lavsky, agencies no longer hire college graduates, as they used to in the 1960's on the theory that "they have their finger oo the pulse" of the coosuming oation. Jingle writers united about eight months ago to form the Society of rangers and Composers, which now claims 104 members in New York. Mr. Lavsky serves as the conprofit corpora-tion's chairman and says the group's first goal is to "establish a schedule of ethics for the industry."

A big step in that direction would be to secure the right of jingle writers to own their own music. Another aim is to end the cattle calls where large oumbers of musicians compete without knowing how many other composers are trying for the same prize. Jingle writers also would like to be paid for their 'demos,

Mr. Lavsky admits that SAMPAC "can't win all the battles" at this point because the group does not have a trade unioo's power to negotiate for a standard cootract.

In spite of the competition and the haggling over fees, jingle writers seem to enjoy their work. Bill Backer calls the job "exciting and never boring." Without much coaxing, Roy Eaton will run through a medley of his hits a capella.

"There are purists," says Dick Applemen, "who feel that only a symphocy is real. But wheo you're in the ears of the public, it's rewarding.

Since 1898, Nuveen Municipal Bond Research has made the difference for professional investors.

Nuveen has specialized in municipal securities for over 78 years, giving us an expertise in the field of tax-exempt securities that is virtually unrivalled.

We have maintained a municipal bond research department for decades. And as our municipal underwriting and trading has grown in volume, so has our research output — in quality as well as quantity.

Our clients have access to hundreds of reports each year covering individual tax-exempt issuers. They have come to value the Nuveen advance reports on new issues which allow ample time for decision making. And, our clients like the way we follow issues until the last bond has been retired.

Nuveen Research is a collective effort, calling upon the experience and insights of people throughout the Nuveen organization. Men and women with 15 to 40 years of experience in all phases of municipal bonds: sales, trading and underwriting.

Nuveen research is one of the reasons we believe that our municipal bond products are the most comprehensive and, quite possibly, the best in the industry.

If you need municipal bond research, you need Nuveen.

Money in the Clam Flats of Maine

Stetson Everett, owner of Eastern Bait Company, with a customer in Hancock, Me. His sales of worms are:

By SANFORD E. PHIPPEN

HANCOCK, Me .- "Since 1939, every election year seems to bave been a bad one for the worming business," says Stetson Everett, owner and operator, along with his wife Marjorie, of the Eastern Bait Company. "In 1972, business wasn't good. And this year it's not good."

Mr. Everett doesn't deal in garden variety worms. His business is with the sandworms and bloodworms that cohabit with (and eat) the clams in mud flats all along the Maine coast.
The worms, ranging in size from just a few inches to 27 inches or more, look something like a nightcrawler with frilly edges (the bloodworm) or like centipedes (sandworm). Both bite. Both are also in demand as bait. Mr.

Everett grosses from $300,000 to $500,000 a year in filling that demand. According to Mr. Everett, there are somewhere between 1,000 and 1,400 licensed wormdiggers in Maine, 70 of them selling to Eastern Bait through the company's five shops—in Hancock Rockland, Milbridge and Beals Island, Me., and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

The diggers work each tide, going out twice a day, day or night, and aver-aging 800 worms a tide (1,000 or more in a good year). Mr. Everett pays 5,5 cents apiece for bloodworms (they're scarcer and livelier) and 3.5 cents for sandworms. That's np a half-cent and three-tenths of a cent, respectively from what it was early last spring. The reason is that the diggers went on strike for higher pay in May.
While the strike tended to disrupt business pretty thoroughly, it "was needed," according to Mr. Everett, "be-cause people hadn't bad a raise for five years. Our raises come last, you know. Everyone else—the auto and steel workers, for instance,—gets raises two or three years before wormdiggers."

Mr. Everett, born in Boston 33 years ago, moved with his family to Gardiner.
Me., when he was six. He attended the University of Maine at Augusta for two years, than took computer courses from the International Business Machines Corporation and the RCA Corporation. For a time, he worked with com-puters for the Depositors' Trust Company in Augusta.

But he was missing two things-being oear the ocean and being his own boss. So in 1971 he sold his home to raise money and bought Eastern Bait from its founder, Frank D'Amico, who bad been a worm dealer since 1939. In: Hancock township, population 1,070, he has become something of a personage. Has independence made him a millionaire? Mr. Everett laughs. "I'm too young," he says. But it has made possi-ble the huilding two years ago of a $70,000 bouse for the Everetts and their five children on two acres of land on the stylish west side of Hancock, the acquisition of a new Chevrolet station wagon and a four-wheel-drive year into the cattle business, Mr. Everett and a partner, Steve Coffin, a neigh-

Total Bob Evans sales, at $58.8 million, were up 23 percent over 1975.

Profits in 1976 hit a record $2.8 million. Hog market analysts applauded the fig-

The 1975 calendar year had brought the four-year hog market price cycle to a record high in October at 66 cents a pound. As Daniel Evans, company chairman, chief executive officer and Bob's cousin explained: "We lost a lot of business in sausage because we had to raise the price on a one-oping roll."

of business in sausage because we had to raise the price on a one-pound roll to $1.99. A lot of housewives took sausage off the menu because it was selling for more than a lot of steak."

Even at $1.99, he said, the company was losing about 10 cents each sale. But profit margins now are "back to normal," he added, with hogs selling at a depressed 34 cents a pound and the one-pound sausage roll back to $1.49.

The company appears to bave a solid grip on its markets. It introduced its sausage in the Baltimore-Washington market in October 1975, for example. Just one year later, Dan Evans contends, the Bob Evans brand has drawn and the said ton-selling Green Will brand even with top-selling Green Hill brand in the area. Back in the Midwest, its market share is 50 percent in Cleveland, according to newspaper surveys, 34 percent in Columbus, Ohio, (where the Bob Evans Farms beadquarters are

But, at least in his first two films, he seemed to touch a public nerve, although his success was due partly to his mastery of merchandising techniques.

By his calculations, Mr. Laughlin and his wife and co-star, Delores Taylor, had after-tax income of well over $10 million from their first two movies. Almost all of it is now gone, they say, despite some creditors' assertions that the Laughlins squirreled part of it away to keep it from them,

When Mr. Laughlin broke the rules here, a grudeing respect grew up for him because, no matter what the critics said about his films, they made hig money. Mr. Laughlin's current downed he incide that it is only a treasily -and he insists that it is only a transitory situation forced on him by the movie Establishment—appears to be new evidence of one of Hollywood's oldest axioms: you're only as good as your last picture.

Eighteen months ago Mr. Laughin was a kind of economic here here, to whom studio chieftains paid attention because they envied his secret of making money. Now, he complains. Ted Ashley, the chairman of Warner Brothers, a one-time business associate for whom he claims to have made millions, refuses to return his phone calls. Mr. Laughlio's troubles surfaced about a year ago, about the time of the ambitious expansion move, when the third Laughlin-starring, movie, "The Master Gunfighter," bombed at the box office. He said it has takeo in about $5 million in theater rentals so far, but he invested about $7.5 million of his own money to make it. Magic did not strike the third time. Critics assailed the movie as poor entertainment and said it was excessively violent, but Mr. Laughlio attributes its violent, but Mr. Laughlio attributes its poor showing to the fact that it was released in October, traditionally a slack time in movie houses.

How much of his company's troubles are related to the failure of "The Master Gunfighter" is problematical. But it is clear that the company had other problems that are not peculiar to Hollywood — problems of over-expansion, inadequate capital and insufficient cash flow.

Mr. Laughlin says that, besides using revenues from "Gunfighter," he had ex-sion with money from a new release of "Billy Jack" last spring But he as-serts that Warner Brothers intentionalserts that Warner Brothers intentionally did a poor job of distributing the film as part of an overall plan to make him increasingly dependent on the studio and to squeeze him into bankruptcy—a charge the studio denies.

The actor-producer alleges that the company unlawfully deceived him when it persuaded him to approve the sale of "Billy Jack" to televisioo as part of a 20-film sale to NBC. The company's motives, he alleges were a desire to consummate a big television desire to consummate a big television sale at a time when the corporation needed revenues to offset a big drop in earnings. Warner Brothers had had Exorcist" hut no hint of comparable box office success a year later. Mr. Laughlin says Warner Brothers will reduce his debt by $600,000 for the one showing of "Billy Jack" on NBC, but claims he has been offered a minimum of $1.75 million for one showing from the American Broadcasting Companies.

The entrepreneur has made a kind of truce with his creditors. At the recent meeting oo the Studio City set for "Billy Jack Goes to Washington," he gave creditors three choices: settle now for 50 percent paid over the next three months, with the promise of full payment later, or "sue me." He said about half of the 240 creditors were

What about the future? Mr. Laughlin is hoping that his enterprises can be pulled out of their tailspins with a big box office response to "Billy Jack Goes to Washington," for which he says he has financing commitments from the Crocker National Bank and $3 million in guarantees from theater owners. The picture's release has been repeatedly delayed, but is now scheduled for next

"Right now," Mr. Laughlin said,
"We're going to finish this picture, and we're going to distribute it, and we're going to get oo our feet and take five months off and take care of our own personal life and our own soul."

Warner Brothers' Scenario

HOLLYWOOD - Warner Brothers Inc., which is tangled in a lawsuit with "Billy Jack" star-producer Thomas R. Laughlin, was one of Hollywood's pio-neer film producer-distributors, the studio that first gave the world talking pictures in 1926. Now it is typical of the corporate landscape in modern Hol-

Hollywood has always been more or less controlled by 'New York money men." Many of its first movies were financed by furriers from Manhattan who not only liked the money they made from film investments but the glamor and starlets that came with the business. Things haven't changed all that much—the glamor still turns on the mooey men—but nowadays the tycoons who rule the industry are more likely to be executives who commute in corporate jets and direct hroad-based conglomerates. Typical of this breed is Charles Blundorn, the chairman of Gulf and Western Industries, which owns Paramount Pictures, and Steveo J. Ross the chairman of Warner Communications for the conglomerate that nications Inc., the conglomerate that inherited the Warner Brothers legend.

Another trend here these days is for conglomerates increasingly to turn over day-to-day operations of studios to former Hollywood deal-makers—exagents such as Ted Ashley, the chairman of Warner Brothers, and lawyers, such as Frank G. Wells, its president. Warner Communications Inc. had its nucleus in a Manhattan mortuary-the Riverside Chapel. Mr. Ross, a one-time professional football player, got into the business in 1954; he married the boss's daughter, and was asked to join the family undertaking business.

Subsequently he moved this company far afield, into car rentals and parking lots and other fields under the name of the Kinney Services Corporation. In 1968, convinced that leisure time activities were a major growth busice: the growing conglomerate acquired Ashley Famous Agency, a talent agency headed by Mr. Ashley.

It was a key turning point for the company because it gave Warner ex-tensive experience and talent in the eotertainment field. Among other things, it put it in position to exploit the potential of a film company that was on the rocks, Warner Brothers-Seven Arts Company, which it bought in 1969 in a $400 million tender offer.

The funeral business later was sold and certain other aspects of the origi-nal Kinney husiness were spun off. The Warner Communications name was adopted, and cable television and paperback book publishing ventures were acquired. Through the Warner-Seven Arts deal, the company moved ioto phonograph records which turned out to be highly profitable.

Mr. Ashley was chairman of Warner for six years, then left the post in 1975 for almost a year, until rejoining the company as chairman in an executive suite shakeup early this year. All of this appears to have been profitable for the company. Last week Warner Communications inc. reported record earnings for its third quarter, ended Sept. 30, and for the first nine months of the year. Quarterly earnings rose 24 percent to $15.5 million on reveoues of $188.4 million.

bsence of any highly visible sings since the 1973 meat ver, the movement is oot mply matured. Raiph Nader ers once focused on issues f an auto specy act and a law passed was not necesbecause its implementation the hands of an industry-

Today, Mr. Nader, Mrs. Foreman and others are concentrating on institutional and structural reform corporate accountability, the right of citizens to sue government agencies that fail to implement the law, quality appointments to agencies, and measures to open the government to citizen participation.

Victories on these much more complex issues are harder to achieve. They have been almost impossible during the past two years because of the need to muster a twothirds vote in Congress to override President Ford's repeated vetoes.

Take, for example, Ralph Nader's and the C.F.A.'s No. 1 priority: establishment of an Agency for Consumer Protection, which would have the power to iotervene in the regulatory actions of the Federal Trade Commission, the Agriculture Department, and other such powerful bureaucra-cies. In this, the sixth year of effort to get the bill through, both the Senate and the House passed it, although the margin in the House was the smallest in the history of that chamber: 9 votes.

"People say that wasn't much of a margin. But we were up against the National Association of Manufacturers, the Business Round Table, the National Association of Independent Businesses, and the White House," said Mrs. Foreman in a recent interview. "And we still got it passed."

The plan of the consumer forces on the Agency for Consumer Protection bill was to present Mr. Ford with it as close to election time as possible, thus turning it into a political not potato. (The House and Senate versions of the bill differed slightly, so that a conference was necessary before it could go to the White House.)

That plan was frustrated by Senator James B. Allen, Democrat of Alabama, with repeated filibusters during the closing weeks of the session,

But Carol Foreman and Joan Claybrook, executive director of Ralph Nader's Congress Watch, decided not to let the President escape so easily. In late September, with the backing of six other national and local consumer groups, they released a bistering attack on the President's con-sumer record, couched in the form of a criminal indictment with 82 counts. They did not endorse his opponent, Jimmy Carter, but the implication was there.

A graduate of Washington University in St. Louis where she majored in political science, Mrs. Foreman has her unfinished graduate thesis sitting at home in a box, mute evidence of her desire to deal directly with the problems of government. Her lobbying skills were developed over the years in a variety of jobs and are abetted by a down-to-earth charm and explicit language that has endeared her to her male audiences

She has, among other things been executive assistant to James Roosevelt when he was a member of the House, a Congressional liaison aide for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and later chief of Information and Congressional liaison for Planned Parenthood a job she held while pregnant, she remembers with a chuckle. The Foremans live just inside the District of Columbia line, near Chevy Chase; 7 Mrs. Foreman and her husband, Jay, have had to make some sacrifices to combine a family life—they have two children, aged nine and six—with two working lives. We have no social life," Mrs. Foreman says simply. But there are occasional vacations and a chance to use her golf clubs. She is also reputed to be a Hercely tennis player whose strength belies her

One of the few older types of issues to which C.F.A. devoted much effort this year was item-pricing legislation, and this brought it cose-to-nose with the supermarket industry. About four years ago, the industry decided to phase in an electronic check-out system.

The conflict came about because of the promise of an associated labor-saving advantage: clerks would no longer have to stamp each individual item with a price. Legislation to require that prices be kept on individual items was introduced and pressed by C.F.A., in coordination with other groups, in numerous states and in Congress. The industry fought back, but by last May it had capitulated

The boards of directors of the National Association of Food Chains and the Supermarket Institute, the two major trade groups, voted to recommend to their members that item pricing be retained.

When the industry's executives came up for air after this public relations disaster, they took a hard look at Mrs. Foreman. Her husband. Jay, they had discovered. was the administrative assistant and special counsel to the president of the Retail Food Clerks International,

The clerks' union, went the assumption, might lose jobs if the electronic check-out system caught on and C.F.A.'s crusading for item-pricing legislation was actually a veiled effort to kill the whole system in order to save the jobs of the retail clerks. That theory surfaced in a recent Wall Street Journal editorial entitled Commbial Consumerism as well as in private conversations with industry executives.

What has been ignored, however, is that every major consumer group in the country favored item pricing legislation. Furthermore, what finally moved the trade groups to recommend that item prices be retained was a study paid for by the industry itself.

The conflict of interest issue does pose a real problem for C.F.A. in one sense. although Mrs. Foreman downplays it. The interests of the diverse member groups do not always coincide. Mrs. Foreman readily acknowledges that C.F.A. bas not taken a position on nuclear energy for that very

As Representative Benjamin S. Rosen-thal, a New York Democrat who has championed many pieces of consumer legisla-tion, said rather plaintively not long ago. "We still don't have the ability to bring massive political pressure to bear when we need it. We have the support of 30 or 40 million people, but they aren't unified."

Ironically, if President Ford wins this week's election, the likelihood of concentrated mass organizing efforts is greater than it would be with a Caster victory. Leaders of the movement like Mrs. Foreman say they would direct their resources away from often fruitless legislative efforts and to grassroots organizing.

A Carter victory, in contrast, would be likely to bring about the passage of numerous bills that the consumer forces have been pushing for a long time, and a continued conceotration on reforming the system from the top down. One of the first pieces of legislation Mr. Carter has pledged to sign is the Consumer Protection Agency bill. And in that case, the head of that agency just might turn out to be Carol Tucker Foreman,

Every managed municipal bond fund worth its prospectus strives for the highest possible income consistent with the preservation of capital.

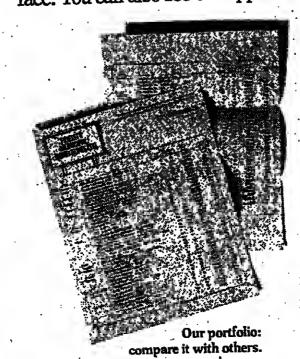

Each fund-has its own approach to achieving this objective. Our method is to keep management costs lower.

Lower expenses.

If our expenses were higher your net income would naturally be less.

Conversely, a fund with higher costs would probably have to assume greater risk to offer the same return.

You can appreciate the bind others face. You can also see our appeal.

No sales charges.

Fidelity Municipal Bond Fund has no sales charge or redemption fee. This offers additional savings when compared to municipal bond investments with a sales charge.

All your investment dollars go to work for you from the outset to obtain as high a level of tax-free income as possible.

timing. Suppose share for a stock tow at $15. That able loss for tax if, as the season hammered down $12?

tax-selling game is to take advantage of unduly-depressed prices late in the year and to buy issues that show promise of an upward bounce in early 1977, once the selling pressure has lifted. Gold stocks, some brokers say, might be a candidate for such a bounce, since this group has suffered buge price declines

"I comb the American Stock Exchange every December for stocks that have gotten clobbered," says ooe securities salesman, "and it often makes for a good short-term trading turn."

Each investor should, of course, study his own tax situation—and portfolio—before unloading a loser stock. And if the situation is at all complicated, it might pay to see a tax counselor, especially since the tax law has changed.

As a starter, the Standard & Poor's Corporation makes these suggestions:

QCompute your net long-term and short-term gains or losses realized on transactions made so far in 1976.

§Next, evaluate your tax position to determine whether you need or can use offsetting losses or gains, keeping in mind any loss carryover from prior

4Thn comb through your portfolio with two objectives in mind: a possible

overall improvement in the quality or appropriateness of your boldings, and possible tax advantages in making switches

As for specific tax-sale candidates, the investment advisory service has compiled a list of stocks—all down 20 percent or more from their 1976 highs—that it defines as possessing "below-average prospects."

These issues include Allied Supermarkets, American Motors, Farah Monufocturing, Gap Stores, Gino's, Great Western United, Holiday Inns, Homestake Mining, Liberty Loan, Orange-co, Ponderosa System, Ramada Inns, Texti Industries and Warnaco.

For "suitable replacement condi-

For "suitable replacement candidates." i! suggests such stocks ts American District Telegraph, Beatrice Foods, NLT Corporation, Pizza Hut, R. J. Reynolds Industries, Southwest Forest Industries and United Refining. Hence, the "switch"—out of one disappointing stock into a more promising issue, a practice stockhrokers are apt to encourage, "It's good for our business," admits one broker. "With a straight tax-loss sale, you get one commission. With a two-way switch, you wind up with two commissions."

Smith Barney, Harris Upham has compiled its own sampling of suggestions for tax switches, a list designed to allow tax savings plus the retection of an industry position in another

Among "one-way tax switches," it lists the sale of Louisiana Pacific and the purchase of Boise Cascade, the sale of Honeywell and the purchase of the NCR Corporation, the sale of Clark Equipment and the purchase of Deere & Company. In each case, the firm says, the suggested purchase appears to offer greater potential than the sale candidate.

There is also the "two-way switch," which might more properly be known as the "either way." In this system, the investor may get out of whichever loss stock on the list he holds, and into a complementary issue. That is, if you have Armstrong Cork, sell it and buy Masonite. If you have Masonite, do the reverse. Other suggestions for two-way switching include Rohm and Hans-Du Pont, Johnsoo & Johnsoo-Baxter-Travenol, Genuine Parts-Echlin Manufacturing and Shell Oil-Standard Oil (Indiana).

At Bache Halsey Stuart, the approach is somewhat different. Analyst Henry L. Jicha Jr. notes that his firm favors switching all the way out of certain groups and into more promising ooes.

For example, the firm recommends switching out of international oils and into domestic oils. Other groups regarded as promising for 1977 include building materials, forest products, pollution control, retail trade and fire-and-casualty insurance.

There are two important changes io the new tax law that affect tax-selling strategies:

GFor long-term capital gains, geoerally assessed at one-half the rate on short-term gains (which can go as high as 70 percent), the holding period has been extended from more than six mooths to more than nine months for the tax year starting in 1977, and to 12 months for 1978 and in succeeding CStarting in 1977, the amount of capital losses that can be offset against ordinary income will increase from $1,000 to $2,000. In 1978 and succeeding years, that rises to $3,000.

The first change could increase the relative attraction of ainting for short-term gains, since an additional risk of a price decline is incurred in holding for a longer period.

As for the second change, Standard & Poor's notes that "by increasing the amount of ordinary income against which capital losses can be offset after this year, the new law appears to tip the scales in favor of deferring losses." But the ultimate decision depends upon each investor's particular situation.

Bear in mind, the advisory service adds, that this year's $1,000 loss deduction expires if it is not used. Thus, if you own stocks on which you have paper losses of $6,000 and you believe these issues should be culled from your portfolio, consider taking at least $1,000 of the loss in 1976. Then you'll be able to offset the remaining paper loss of $5,000 against 1977 and 1978 ordinary income.

Another strategy for tax savings involves the "doubling-up" process. This is particularly useful for a stock held at a paper loss but which the owner-for sentimental or other reasons—wishes to retain.

The technique here is for the investor to buy a number of shares of the same stock equal to his present holding—hence the doubling-up—and then sell his original stock. (In order to qualify as a tax-loss sale, the original holdings plus the new stock must be held for 31 days). Thus, be gets the benefit of a tax loss and still retains the shares that, say, Aunt Martha left him in her will.

"Imagine me enjoying tax-free income, just like the rich. For only $1000!"

"It's an investment even I can afford?"

Introducing the Tax-Free Bond Fund that gives you, the average investor, maximum flexibility. And makes your participation in a portfolio of municipal bonds remarkably easy. For a minimum investment of $1000, you may now be part-owner of a wide range of bonds, each of which is rated A or higher. In a manner that, until recently, never before existed.

"I pay no sales charge. I like that."

Every dollar of your investment goes right to work for you. Nothing is taken off the top. Which can mean pretty substantial savings. What's more, once you've invested the minimum $1000, you enjoy the option of adding to your investment as often as you like for as little as $25 or more.

"I earn tax-free income every day."

If you earn $25,000 or more annually, tax-free income becomes a significant objective. As a Fund participant, you earn tax-free income every day. (As opposed to taxable income on your savings account.) Further, the Fund may offer you higher earnings (after taxes) than a bank does. And features a special reinvestment privilege. This means you can re-invest your tax-free earnings in additional shares every month, thus compounding the earnings of your account.

"I don't pay any penalty for early withdrawal?"

Flexibility is a key aspect of your portfolio. It means you have immediate —and free—withdrawal rights at any time. There's no penalty for early withdrawal like there is on long-term bank savings acounts. And should you decide to redeem your Fund shares, you need not wait to find a buyer. Your shares will be redeemed immediately at the net asset value based on market price. Prices of your portfolio will be posted daily in leading newspapers.

"My money isn't riding on the ups and downs of any one city."

Diversification is another important part of the Oppenheimer Tax-Free Bond Fund. To reduce investment risk and provide stability, your money will be invested in a wide geographic spread of quality Municipals. All bonds (maturities of one year or more) will be rated A, AA or AAA by the national rating firms, Standard & Poor's and Moody's. Importantly, no BBB or non-rated bonds will be included.

"A monthly transaction statement means I'm in control of my investment."

It works just like your personal monthly bank statement, telling you how many shares you own, the current value of each share and the tax-free income you've earned. And it provides you with a complete detailed history of your account from the day you begin.

"It's nice to know my investment is fully managed by Oppenheimer."

To meet the objectives of tax-free income and preservation of capital, your bond portfolio will be guided, full-time, by Oppenheimer's professional know-how and experience. In fact, Oppenheimer Management Corp. and its subsidiaries are presently managing over$1.4 billion for more than a half-million shareholders around the world. It's this kind of money management experience that stands behind your municipal bond portfolio.

eople as Mr. Stroh, also chairman of the United States Brewers Association, the attempt to ban throwaways is unwise. He said in an interview that a ban on disposable beverage containers would increase beverage prices by $40 million a yesr in Michigan, would force business to divert expansion capital to retooling, would eliminate a sizable number of jobs and would not make significant imposes would not make significant inroads against litter.

Mr. Stroh said he is concerned about litter and resource depletion. But for him a better answer is the creation of municipal recycling operations. These facilities, he said, would not only eliminate the need for changing from a throwaway system but also would eliminate the need for landful operations.

Mr. Washington of the Michigan United Conservation Clubs rejects Mr. Stroh's arguments. He says costs would not rise, using figures that show that consumers pay 30 to 40 percent most for beverages in throwaways then in accompanies of the total cost of the total co returnables. Any increased cost due to retooling would be offset by savings in the use of returnable bottles or recycled cans, he believes. He adds that any jobs lost in the caoning or bottling industries would be offset by additional jobs in transportation and handling.

What will happen Tuesday? Environmentalists say their best opportunities for victory may be in Michigan and Maine. A Detroit News poll in September found that 79 percent of those responding favor the Michigan throw-away proposal. But this is a fluid election year. Mr. Stroh, when asked how the measure will fare, smiled wanly: "It's going to be very close."

likely direction of those key indicators in the absence of any major changes in national economic policies. According to all the polls, economic issues are paramount in the election to be held next Tuesday. The public is concerned about pocket-book questions—jobs and the inflation rate, in that order.

A recent poll of almost 500 of the nation's top business economists, found 33.9 percent ranked inflation as the most important economic problem in the picture for 1977, while 23.3 percent put unemployment at the top of the list and 17.6 percent named excessive Government controls. Only a small minority of the economists (6.3 percent) said they expected the next economic downturn to begin next year. However, a big group (53.6 percent) looked for one to develop in 1978.

As for consumer confidence, the divergent results of two prominent polls recently are confusing. The Conference Board reported last week that confidence had fallen sharply in October, with its index down 7.5 points to 79.3. By contrast, earlier in October, the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center announced that its consumer confidence index had risen sharply—by 6.6 points from the May level to a four-year high.

Once the election is over, Washington can begin to concentrate on the big domestic and international economic issues confronting the nation.

Many critics feel that the Ford Administration long ago should have undertaken some moderate "micro" stimulative steps to ease the unemployment problem through a public-works jobs program of some sort. And whether President Ford is returned to office or the mantle of the Presidency is passed to Jimmy Carter, some selective job-creating plan, especially for youths and the unskilled, appears to be necessary.

Another top priority is the creation of a compre-hensive, meaningful energy policy that would put the national imprimatur behind the effort to increase supplies of alternative sources of energy to heavy volumes of imported oil. The lack of a positive energy program has been one or the most glaring failures of Washington the last three years.

Then there is the overall state of the economy. Will it regain its old momentum without fresh fiscal or monetary stimulus? Will there be a need for another round of tax cuts for individuals and for business? Will the public go along with relatively slow growth in the interest of squeezing more inflation out of the system, or will pressures be so great to cut joblessness that national policies will have to become more stimulative?

Internationally, the United States will have to try to assume a greater leadership role, pressing for the financial and other remedies that Britain needs to meet its deep-seated economic problems and supporting the financial rescue effort through the International Monetary Fund. America will also have to exert its muscle against the push of the OPEC countries. A big oil-price increase in December would be an acute problem for many industrialized countries and an outright catastrophe for the less-developed

There has been no economic leadership in the free world for years. It is a role that the United States is uniquely able to fill-and must fill.

No matter who wins in Tuesday's elections, it is likely that the United States will move to a somewhat more stimulative policy, either in the fiscal or monetary field, fairly soon—unless the recovery picks up on its own power. That likelihood would be widely cheered in other parts of the world that depend so heavily on the economic developments in and leadership of the United States.

Dow Spurts 26 -Volume Dips

The stock market registered a sharp advance last week, with the Dow Jones industrial average gaining 26.18 points to close at 964.93. Turnover oo the New York Stock Exchange, however, contracted to 78.81 million shares from 83.62 million shares in the preceding week.

Analysts attributed the market's price upswing mainly to the announcement by a Saudi Arabian official on Tuesday that his country would press for only a "moderate rise" in oil prices at the Dec. 15 ministerial meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Other OPEC countries had indicated they would seek a rise of 10 to 25 percent at the meeting.

Analysts noted that considerable bargain bunting also helped spur prices especially in many of the glamour and blue chip issues. In the previous four weeks the widely-watched Dow had tumbled 70.56 points mostly on concern over the sluggish economic

Cootributing to the advance was the move by many major banks to trim their prime interest rates to 61/2 from 63/4 percent. Analysts said that declining rates for commercial paper and soft loan demand apparently touched off the prime rate

The news by the Commerce Department at the opening Friday that the index of leading economic indicators fell 0.7 percent in September, its second straight drop, bad little effect on the market. When a 1.5 percent drop in the indicators was announced a month ago, (it has since been revised to 0.7 percent) the Dow plunged 18 points in a single day.

from their odd view that perfect competition was the ruling force of mar-Mr. Simon wes a most successful band salesmen who attained partnership in one of the biggest bond-issue and brokerage firms, Selomon Brothers. He might have made a splendid Secretary of the Treasury in the third quarter of the 19th century. However, we are not celebrating the centennial but the bicentennial of the republic. More imagination and knowledge are now required. The administra-tion's efforts to combat inflation by monetary restriction bave already bad the effect of increasing unemployment -It is now about 8 percent-and bave cut orders for productive capital goods by over 20 percept in recent months. Production is leveling off despite the cheerful remarks of the chief economists of President Ford, who are now trying to shift the blame for the Ameri-can recession to "foreign trends."

Nor is their any change in the offing. President Ford's men are adherents of the "slow growth" school that would inevitably increase unemployment and exert severe pressure on Europe by cut-ting United States income and imports.

True enough, the Administration is pleased that employment bes risen. There is an ugly suspicion about, how-ever, that the labor force increase, mainly in women, is due to the need to increase family income that has been sharply cut by the combination of inflatinn and unemployment.

Nor must the labor situation in the United States be viewed in British terms. Whereas in Britain real wages after infletion since 1968 still show a substantial increase (though lately there bas been some fall), they were severely-by 10 percent-reduced in the United States after accounting for inflation, and American productivity in-creased substantially more than ours. Further sharp cuts in demand brought about by slashing public expenditures and by a monetary policy which forces up interest rates seem totally inappropriate in the given American framework and seem most ominous internationally.

Yet there is nn doubt that these are the domestic policies which Mr. Ford and his advisers think not merely fit but vital for the country and which were sanctified when their guru-Prot.

Milton Friedman-won his Nobel Prize. It cannot be denied that the direct influence of the present Administration on world economics has been, to say the least, unhelpful. With help from Germany, the United States has cut back a proposed increase in the World Bank's lending potential to less developed countries. Reforms put forward for the International Monetary Fund seem 'calculated to restrict Governments in financial difficulties in choosing suitable measures of readjustment. Indeed, such debtor nations would be forced greatly-perhaps catastrophically—to increase unemploy-ment and to cause vast losses in terms and consumption. Worse still, the United States was powerfully against controls over international money flows, which under-mined stability in many countries. This is a most important retreat, even from tha original Bretton Woods compact. There is little here for us to commend.

of a shrinkage of assets, production

Thus, both in the domestic and in the international fields, the continu-ance of the policies of the Ford Admin-istration forebodes evil for the world as a whole and, since we are among the weakest countries in conventional terms, more especially for Britain, at least until the North Sea oil flows fully. In contrast, Jimmy Carter's campaign has shown some understanding of the problems which trouble the mixed economies of the nonSoviet orbit. While all statistical calculations are subject to a very considerable degree of doubt and uncertainty, there can be no question that the present appalling hudget deficit of the United States is mainly due to the depression which the Nixon-Ford Administrations have in-flicted. If full employment were achieved then the deficit would all but disappear, if not turn into a surplus, and manufacturing productivity would improve with a jump Inflation in the United States would be mitigated and not exacerbated by fuller employment and increasing productivity—as would be the more. equitable distribution of income and wealth. It is the poor (and especially the nonwhite school-leavers but also the adults) who are suffering most and who turn towards violence when all indications point to the increase of

There was at first hardly any doubt where Jimmy Carter stood on all these issues. In his struggle to obtain the Presidential candidature of the Democratic party, he concentrated on show-ing himself passionately concerned with precisely these issues.

He strove to put the issues of mass unemployment and less inequality into the debate going on in both parties. He publicly stated his willingness to introduce price controls and evolve an incomes policy, if needed, to secure stability at high employment.

He could point to the success even of former President Nixon's experiment, which enabled the United States to expand without accelerating inflation and which was brusquely terminated for dogmatic reasons with disastrous results. Governor Carter refused to be intimidated into promising whole-sale cuts in public expenditure, es President Ford does on every possible occasion in disregard of the social con-

Hnwever, Mr. Carter's problams were greatly aggravated and finally were shifted by the challenge of Governor Ronald Reagan of California to win the Republican nomination. This, in turn, forced President Ford to take an ex-tremely conservative laissez-faire stand. As time wore on, there was increasing evidence that the voters could he frightened by the threat of higher taxes, however excellent the purposes they supported and however much the increased revenue yield would result from closing tax loopholes.

Thus the doubts about Mr. Carter's views, which developed during the Presidential campaign and which enahled President Ford, at its beginning, to score some telling points, should not at this stage be taken a a less favorable attitude of to the woes of the world ec

The Candidates and the Tax Laws

Bỳ EILEEN SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON — As the political campaign moves down to its final few days, many individuals say they still don't know how to vote because they don't know where Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, stands. Many others, of many different political philosophies, say they don't know bow - or whether - to vote because they can't see any significant difference between Mr. Carter and President Ford.

Both statements are puzzling to anyone who is interested in the subject of Federal tax policy. The difference between the two men comes not so much out of the hints of e general tax reduction somewhere in the future which both tossed out this week. Rather, it is in their overall views of needed changes within the tax

Mr. Carter, to be sure, has declined to spell out all the details of the tax proposals he would make, as President on the ground that he intends to offer a tax-reform plan that would be truly comprehensive in scope, and therefore he noes not yet know what every detail would be,

Even so, Mr. Carter bas been remerkably explicit and unwavering on some key issues of tax policy. And his views, in those areas where they heve been spelled out, when combined with President Ford's detailed record of specific recommendations to Congress, do indeed disclose significant differences between the two men.

Mr. Ford's position, to state the mat-ter briefly, is generally one of advocacy of lower taxes on business and on investurs. The lung list of specific pro-posals includes a reduction in the corporate tax rate, a still-unspecified plan to integrate the personal and corporate income tax, detailed recommendations for lowering taxes on electric utilities, a reduction in the taxes to be paid on most long-term capital gains and some additional tax incentives for stock ownership, among many others.

To be sure, Mr. Ford has also proposed—and in his campaign speeches and debates keeps emphasizing—an increase to $1,000 from $750 in the personal tax exemption. But this proposed tax cut, although large, constitutes only about one-quarter of the total of nearly $42 billion in net tax reductions of all types that the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation calculates have come nut of the Ford White House in the past year.

In addition, Mr. Ford has made the $10.6 billion ta: reduction thet would result from the increase in the personal exemption contingent upon enactment of en equal and offsetting amount of expenditure cuts—a prerequisite he has not imposed on his other more business- and investment-oriented tax-reduction plans.

Thus Mr. Ford can certainly be described as a conservative in his tax program - Mr. Carter, on the other band, cannot accurately be tagged simply as a liberal. Whet be has disclused to date of his intentiona in the tax-policy area is too complicated for that. But there is certainly a tendency on his part to take less seriously than Mr. Ford does the pleas that busi-ness and investors need more favored tax treatment if they are to generate the capital needed for investment in the years ahead.

Lord Balogh: "What's good for General Motors is good for the country,' . . . is not good

The proposal that Mr. Carter has made that is most unwelcome to investors is his statement — first made at least as early as last March and consistently repeated ever since - that all income should be taxed alike. Translated, this means that capital gains should be taxed as ordinary incomea proposal which, if enacted, would mean a $6 billion annual increase in taxes, a good half of which would be paid by the I percent of all families with incomes in excess of $50,000 a year, who are the nation's big investors.

Yet Mr. Carter has also said something else that may go in quite the opposite direction. He has proclaimed consistently his belief that all income should be taxed only once. Translated, this means that scmething should be done about what used to be called the "double-taxation of dividends" and nowadays is generally discussed under the heading of "integrating the corpo-rate and individual income taxes.

Eliminating the double tax on dividends-first when it is earned as a corporate profit and second when it is received as a dividend—is both difficult and expensive. Depending on the way in which a number of subsidiary problems are bandled (for example, the taxation of retained earnings), integrat-ing the corporate and individual income tax would involve a revenue loss to the government of between $8 hillion and $16 billion, according to from Congressional staff estit.

The individuals who would directly or indirectly, from the would chiefly be bigb-income: the same people whose tax tax capital gains as ordinary i Many tax purists see noth tensibly inconsistent about the taken by Mr. Carter, even the dollars and cents conseque some of them would partly each other out. They say i make sense to try to do sinu ly, all the various things the I tic nominee is advocating.

The competition includes Chase Econometric Associates Inc., a Philadelphiabased subsidiary of the Chase Man-hattan Bank, and Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates Inc., a non-profit company owned by the University of Pennsytvania. Financial data are not disclosed, but Chase Econometric is reported to have more than 600 subscribers though their revenues per sub-subscriber may be lower than D.R.I.'s.

In 1975 D.R.L. earned $884,000 on revenues of $12.7 million. This year, profits in the first six months hit $617,700 on revenues of $7.8 million.

According to Mr. Eckstein, roughly half of the revenues are from sales of forecasts and consulting. The other half comes from time-sharing fees for the use of the computer, data banks and econometric models.

But never a dividend was paid nor was there any place to trade the stock held by the original backers. Some backers may have begun to look like millionaires—but only on paper.

So a public offering of 371,320 D.R.I. shares was planned, at a price of $14.50 to $16 a share. The original part was a given of $14.50 to $16 a share.

Another 238,820 shares are to be sold by shareholders, including Mitch-ell Hutchins Holdings Inc. (73,400 shares) and Bill D. Moyers (about 3,125 shares, he said.)

Mr. Moyers, former press secretary to President Johnson, had been a consultant to both Mitchell Hutchins and D.R.I. in its early days. Now anchor-man and chief correspondent of CBS Reports, Mr. Moyers holds 6,250 D.R.I.

Mr. Eckstein, who owns 139,225 shares, or 10.4 percent of D.R.I. stock, is not selling. Nor are his wife and children, who own 128,061 shares.

That will leave the Eckstein and Mitchell Hutchins interests as the largest in the company. Mitchell Hutchins Is only cutting its share from 22.7 percent to 14.9 percent.

Investors who prefer more stimulating exercise than just staying home clipping coupons may be interested in an offer by the Stratton Corporation, It expects within the next two weeks to begin selling $3 million of "lift privilege" debentures—giving investors the option of taking 15 years of free skiing at its Stratton Mountain resort in the Green Mountains of Vermont in lieu of

To raise tha money it needs to pay off $4 billion of 6.25 percent notes that come due Nov. 15—and to get $2 bil-lion more—the Treasury is auctioning three issues of securities later this week. It will sell three-year notes on Wednesday; seven-year notes on Thursday; and bonds maturing in 2000 on

The yields on these three issues won't be known until after the sales, but they almost certainly won't be high enough to excite many smaller investors. Late tast week, three-month Treasury notes trading in the credit markets yielded about 6.30 percent; seven-month notes, a little more than 7 percent; and 25-year bonds, roughly 7.80 percent. Savings banks, in comparison, pay

6.75 percent on three-year savings cer-tificates, and 7.50 percent on seven-year certificates, the longest-term investment they offer. The comparison of Treasury securities and savings bank certificates is not quite fair, perhaps, because there are state and city tax benefits to be gained from the Federal Government securities, but it's still true that there is little, if any, incentive for smaller investors to shift funds into the new Treasury securities.

The big buyers are expected to be commercial banks, which have yet to see the pickup in demand for loans that many of them predicted earlier this year.

However, business has been especially remiss in its failure to present profit data and price developments in historical perspective.

This negligence has enabled radicals and liberals to falsely portray American business as profiteers and price gougers. Long-term data show that profit margins are a meager 4 to 6 cents on the sales dollar rather than the 28 to 33 cents as reported in the coloion polls. Prices of manufactured goods have lagged behind the wage rate increases as evidenced by the fact an hour of labor in 1973 bought twice the amount of goods that it did in 1939.

THE HOME STRETCH

Try to recall the personal optimism you felt in February. if you can't, you're not :... the only one.

Time, Gentlemen

The Game Ends With a Return To Basics

The campaign for President of the United States comes to an end Tuesday, and most surveys of voter sentiment indicate that the race has, in its final days, become too close to predict, in part because ao unusually large percentage of the electorate says it has not yet picked a candidate.

Professing agreement with that reading of the polls, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter spent their last full week of campaigoing lo the major states concentrating on major issues. And while their discussion may not have done much to enbance voter understanding of those issues. it represented something of a departure in a campaign that has included at least its share of trivia. and it demonstrated that, the trivia aside, the candidates' positions do in-fact present voters with a meaningful choice.

Mr. Ford

For Mr. Ford, that meant assuming aggressive stances on what were essentially defensive positions. Millions are unemployed; inflation, though cut in half from its high point, is still above the norm in the United States, and what seemed to be a recovery from recession bas now entered what even Administration economists concede is a Juli.

Last week's economic news confirms that impression. The President therefore concentrated on the future, predicting a healthy economy in the year ahead and promisingwithout qualification-a tax cut.

Because his appointment by Ricbard Nixon to the vice presidency and his subsequent pardon of Mr. Nixon remains a major if largely unspoken issue in the campaign. Mr. Ford raised the Watergate matter himself. He did so by contrasting the secretiveness and "dictatorial" atmosphere of bis predecessor's White House with bis own. Finally, Mr. Ford and his running mate, Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, attacked aggressively with a theme they have been developing in recent weeks: Mr. Carter Gust as Mr. Ford had characterized his primary opposent, Ronald Reagan) was a man who might lead the natioo into war.

The underlying strategy of the Ford campaign all along has been to describe Mr. Carter as unknown, indecisive, deceptive-and therefore a risk the nation should not run. In the last week of the campaign, Mr. Ford combined strategy with tactic: He portrayed Mr. Carter as dangerously inexpert in foreign affairs, saying he proposed "venturing into the unknown" in a way that "could lead to a major international crisis."

On that relatively bigb road, Mr. Ford had the help of Secretary of State Heory A. Kissinger, who has generally stayed clear of the campaign (lo large part because Mr. Ford has regarded him as a political debit). Mr. Kissinger said Mr. Carter had, in effect, invited a Soviet invasion of Yugoslavia when be said that, as Presideot, he would use American influence but not American troops to prevent such an lovaplaying the same theme, repeating previous references - despite protests even from some Republicans to "Democrat wars." He did so despite his own total support of the Vietnam war, and despite Mr. Ford's and Mr. Kissinger's failing efforts, in the final days of that war, to finance its continuation.

Mr. Carter

For bis part, Mr. Carter refused to respood to the charge that ha was a dangerous man. In his own way, he too fitted tactic to strategy. He has throughout the campaign described the President as a failure as a leader, a characterization that serves a oumber of political purposes: It is an implicit reminder that Mr. Ford occupies the White House by the accident of Mr. Nixon's resignation, it directly attacks Mr. Ford's lack of a broad plan for the American future and it attributes to Mr. Ford responsibility for economic problems.

Last week Mr. Carter attacked largely on the economic issue. He countered Mr. Ford's promise of a tax cut with a similar but qualified promise of his own, saying be too would be able to cut taxes, assuming a budget surplus created by economic growth; he has said the same surplus would pay for expanded social programs. Mr. Carter pressed his economic arguments those states where, coincidentally, they would do the most political good, the industrial Northeast and Midwest, where unemployment is highest and where the biggest blocs of electoral votes exist. Citing the latest economic statistics, he assailed Mr. Ford's "blind optimism" and likened it to

Herbert Hoover's. As he has generally throughout the campaign, Mr. Carter used the Watergate issue only indirectly, by referring to the "Nixon-Ford" years. (Should he lose on Tuesday, one of the major aspects of the political post-mortem may be an inquiry into the wisdom of his approach. In the last of his three debates with Mr. Ford, before an audience of over 80 million, Mr. Carter even declined comment after Mr. Ford had been forced to defend his actions in preventing an carly Watergate invescigation.)

It was left to Senator Walter Mondale, Mr. Carter's running mate, to raise Watergate explicitly, and he had the advantage of doing so to response to Mr. Ford's own statements. Mr. Mondale said Mr. Ford and Mr. Dole had both defended Mr. Nixon until near the end of his tenure, which is true, and doubted whether either had understood the nature and magnitude of the Water-

In the attention to "gut" Issues, the final week was considerably different from much of the previous two months, when the campaign ofteo drifted off into side issues, such as Mr. Carter's disquisition oo lust io a Playboy interview and Mr. Ford's erroneous declaration that the Soviet Union did not dominate Eastern Europe.

Mr. Carter began as a relative outsider in the Democratic Party, the one-term governor of Georgia who had the additional political disability of being a Southerner. He overcame those handicaps and about 10 other Democratic cootenders by steadily amassing convention delegate votes in the primaries. Since then the Democrats appear to bave embraced him wholeheartedly-the lacor movement, for example, has exerted itself on his behalf-but he generally kept the party elders at arms length.

Although they received their nominations only last summer, both candidates have really been campaigning for about two years. Mr. Ford's campaign began shortly after he inherited the Presidency. He engaged in a long and difficult primary struggle for the nomina-tion against Mr. Reagao of Califormia, whose defeat was not assured until the Republican convecthe Reagan supporters reluctantly transferred ailegiance to Mr. Ford, and Mr. Reagan himself has campaigned for the President, but grudgingly.

One measure of the effectiveness of the final campaigns of both men may be the size of the turnout on Tuesday. In 1972, about 55 percent of the voting-age population cast ballots, and there have been estimates that this year's turnout may be even lower. However, the closeness of the contest-The New York Times and other polls show Mr. Ford to have narrowed Mr. Carter's lead to a point where prediction is statistically unsound-and the three televised debates could stimulate participation. Another unpredictable element of the campaign is the candidacy of Eugene McCarthy, who is on the ballot as an independent in 29 states.

The Rest of the Ballot

Other major offices also will be filled Tuesday. They include all 435 seats in the House of Representatives (the lineup in the outgoing House is 286 Democrats, 145 Republicans and four vacancles) and 33 in the Senate (22 Democrats and 11 Republicans.) The Republicans suffered heavily in the 1974 Coogressional elections immediately after Mr. Nixon's forced resignation; failure to recoup Tuesday could seriously diminish the stature of the party, especially if Mr. Car-

Fourteen governors will be selected (eight of the governorships are now held by Democrats, six by Repoblicans) and almost 6,000 legislators in 43 states. In some states voters will also pass judgment oo a variety of contentious issues, and the outcome could influence the disposition of similar issues in

Propositions are on the ballot in six states that would restrict the development of nuclear power generators because of safety questions.

In Massachusetts, there is an unusually strict gun control proposal, banning the ownership of handguns by all civilians. And in Arkansas, voters will decide whether to substantially repeal the state's right-towork-law, which forbids requiring workers to join unions as a condition of employment. The Arkansas referendum is considered a test of the possibility of abolishing such laws elsewhere.

An Unedifying Campaign? It Isn't the First One

By CHARLES MOHR

In August, 1974, when Richard Nixon had withdrawn to his exile on the Pacific and left the Republican Party standing in the ruins of Watergate, it did not seem likely that the 1976 Presidential election would be a real contest. But, somebow, it has become ooe.

The political arithmetic and the fluttering public opinion polls can still be read as pointing towards a satisfying victory for Jimmy Carter in electoral college votes and a more slender victory in popular votes. But the remorseless decline in Mr. Carter's political fortunes has left the outcome in doubt. There is no single or simple explanation for the volatile and unexpected character of the 1976 campaign. Some points, however, do stand out.

The contest has not, actually, been as debased or as intellectually impoverished as many critics bave said. It probably does not compare unfavorably with the modest standards set in past elections. There is uniuspiring po-litical history in the anti-Communist witch-hunting of the 1950's, the clumsy verbal pirouettes of a Spiro Agnew, the platitudes of the 1920's, the empty chants of "I Like Ike," the crafty silence of Richard Nixon, the ingenuous vulnerability of Georga McGovern, the suicidal impulses of Barry Goldwater, the daisy-petal television ads of Lyndon Johnson and John Kennedy's imaginary "missile gap."

Idealistic editorialists can be counted on to write at least one essay every four years saying that an election campaign should be an "educational process." The candidates and their associates never see it that way. They want to

They will not, as this year proved, shrink from embracing an old segregationist Senator in Mississippi (Mr. Carter) or receiving the benediction of a confessed anti-Catholic zealot in a Baptist pulpit (Mr. Ford).

However, both President Ford and Mr. Carter have said there are "profound differences" between them and hava tried to discuss those differences. The television debates. for all their shortcomings, represent a giant advance in political dialogue; as a convenient and workable mechanism to permit voters to assess the contestants, the debates are an improvement over conventional stump campaigning.

THE MACARTALY MYSTERY

have, and it certainly did oot follow the expected course. There will be an endless postelection argument as to whether Mr. Carter failed to wage a campaign based on issues or whether the press and television merely failed to report adequately his basic political message, or whether,

Yet, the campaign did not progress as well as it might perhaps, tha voters could not clearly perceive the message. But, because issues never did come to dominate the campaign and because many voters to the end insisted they could not see Mr. Carter in focus, personality assumed Mr. Ford's stolid, at times insensitive, but often reassuring image of dependable predictability and "decency" seemed to have more appeal than many cynics once guessed possible. Few politicians in recent decades could surpass Mr. Carter in decency, but he never overcame doubts about his pre-

Most poblical insiders would have predicted that Mr. Ford's campaign would compare unfavorably to Mr. Carter's in strategic and tactical finesse. That did not prove to ba true. Mr. Ford's decision to "hide in the White House," as Mr. Carter puts it, early in the campaign did not evoke public anger and provided a safe bunker for the President while Mr. Carter soldiered alooe through weeks of cootro-... versy over just, abortion and anniesty.

There will be a temptation to view the 1976 campaign as a series of wonders by both sidas that oearly canceled each other out and left the race undecided until the end. When the campaign is seen in a longer perspective, however, that may not be the real lesson. The lesson may prove to be that while President Nixon was destroyed personally in 1974, some of his political legacy survived.

He woo the 1968 election, in part, because there was a clearly conservative, possibly cynical and maybe even selfish national impulse to turn away from the Great Society antipoverty and social programs of the mid-1960's. By 1972 the forces of liberalism were in full retreat. Despite Mr. Nixon's fall, both successful and unsuccessful politicians could still feel the conservative oational mood in their bones wheo the 1976 campaign began last winter.

Even addicts of liberal theory swore never to take another drop. "I want to win," became a common remark. One of the most memorable statements of the year cama from a Cambridge, Mass., intellectual who amounced, "The Democratic Party has paid too high a price in the past for doctrinal purity."

No Democrat, at least, read that mood better than Mr. Carter, and his astonishing rise "from nowhere" to tha nomination is easiest to explain by his understanding of it. Last Thursday night, for example, ha was saying of Presidents Kennedy and Johnson that "perhaps they started too many social programs" but that they left behind "a balanced budget."

. No candidate, however, Democratic or Republican, could more genuinely represent the mood than Mr. Ford. When the President tells audiences, "You know where I stand," there can be little doubt of the accuracy of the statement. Mr. Carter has, unquestionably, made tactical and personal mistakes in the campaign. But that does not explain bis being hotly pursued in the polls by an accidental President who pardoned Richard Nixon, who is saddled with a recession, inflation, an unemployment rate of nearly eight percent and who enjoys almost no support from black voters. It does not seem credible to argue, as this campaign draws to a close, that Mr. Carter's coce commanding lead has dwiodled because be was less deft, less politically skilled, or more accident-prone than Mr. Ford. Deeper and stronger. and perhaps still misunderstood, currents in American politics have probably been at work.

Charles Mohr is a New York Times reporter who has been covering both candidates in the Presidential campaign.

In Summary

Big Spending In U.S. by Seoul Is Being Probed

There has been a growing series of disclosures about South Korea's efforts tn win political influence in Washington that seem to go beyond past experience with the lobbying of other foreign governments io a number of ways. The most significant is what appears to be a prodigal spreading of Relatively tittle bas been reported officially. Tungsun Park, a wealthy South Korean entrepreneur and frequent Washington bost, has been questioned by Justice Department agents and has retained counsel. Suzy Park Thomson, a Korean-born aide to retiring Speaker of the House Carl Albert, was granted immunity from prosecu-tion and has testified before a Federal grand jury; Mr. Albert bad earlier an-nounced his retirement. Two Representatives have been informed that they are under criminal investigation in connection with allegations that they accepted bribes.

It has also been reported that there is good evidence that since the early seveoties South Korean agents in Washington have disbursed $500,000 to $1,000,000 a year in payments, gifts and campaign contributions to American elected and appointed officials.

Mr. Park is alleged to be the chief operative, under the personal direction of South Korean President Park Chung Hee; other agents are said to include members of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency. The Justice Department inquiry reportedly is working with a list of 90 members of Congress. Under American law, it is illegal for public officials to take bribes, but normally it is difficult for prosecutors to prove that what is called a campaign contribution is actually a payment for services rendered, and thus a bribe; a 1975 amendment to the campaign reform act made even campaign contributions from foreign sources illegal.

The dictatorship in South Korea wants two things from the United States: military and economic support.

Suppression of Dissent

Korean intelligence agents, like those of other nations, are permitted to operate in the United States under agreements which permit the Central Intelligence Agency to function in foreign countries. The agents have apparently used that freedom to wage a campaign of physical and economic intimidation against opponents of the Park regime in the sizable community nf Korean immigrants in Los Angeles. Leaders of the community and law enforcement officials say that the agents have infiltrated local organizations and businesses.

An Inadequate Nuclear Policy

In using the last days of the campaign to announce a nuclear nonproliferation plan, President Ford bas in effect acknowledged that United States policy on the spread of ruclear weapons has been inadequate, an argument made by the Democratic nominee, Jimmy Carter. In essence the plan asks other countries to join the United States in exercising caution in exporting nuclear technology while negotiating new controls.

Tha Ford Administration, like others before it, has persistently opposed the unilateral restriction of nuclear technology sales, on the ground that other supplier countries would meet growing demand if America did not. The primary issue is reprocessing plaots able to convert spent uranium to weaponsstrength plutonium. The United States is not the only supplier of that technology, but it is the major one.

In the past Washington bas expressed its continuing concern in various ways at various international forums. Recently, it has begun to discuss steps for limitation and control with other supplying countries, and bas begun to tighten its own controls on hilateral nuclear cooperation agree-

Mr. Ford'a plan goes further than present policy in declaring that Americao supplies of nuclear fuel will be cut off from nations violating safguard agreements.

A Busing Case Is Chosen

The Justice Department, which bas been under Presidential orders for several months to try to persuade the United States Supreme Court to limit the scope of busing for school desegregation, has chosen a case in which to make its point.

The department filed a friend-of-the Court brief in proceedings involving Wilmington, Del. The brief relied on the argument that had been outlined earlier by Attorney General Edward H. Levi: Busing orders should be limited to correcting the effects of specific acts of discrimination by school officials and should not necessarily seek to create a completely desegregated school system.

Some Federal judges have taken a contrary position. In Boston, for example, a judge recently concluded that trying to preserve parts of a segregated school system not directly attributable to official actions would make the court responsible for perpetuating segregation.

In the Wilmington case, suburban school districts are appealing lower court decisions creating a busing plan covering urban and suburban schools. The department contends that the remedy exceeds the amount of actual discrimination that was proven. The department, however, did not press the Court to hear the case, suggesting that for procedural reasons it be sent to the Circuit Court of Appeals first.

Politics and The Indicators

The Federal Government's composite index of leading economic indicators, after rising for 17 straight months as the nation came back from a deep recession, bas now fallen for the second month in a row. The obvious political importance of the figure led Democrat Jimmy Carter to charge that there are still worse times to come and Republican spokesmen to discount its economic significance.

The decline was seven-tenths of 1 percent in September: it had been 1.5 percent in August, after the long period of rise. There is doubt among economists about the predictive value of the index when it involves a twomonth period; that value is enhanced when the index is taken on a quarterly

Public May Hear Nixon Tapes

Thirty crucial Nixon White House tape recordings may become available for public listening in a matter of months-instead of in an indefinite period of years—as a result of a United States Court of Appeals decision

The tapes, in which Mr. Nixon and bis aides discuss plans to cover up the Watergate burglary, were played as evidence in the trial of John D. Ehrlichman and H. R. Haldeman, Mr. Nixon's two principal staff members, former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and former Assistant Attorney General Robert C. Mardian. When the four were convicted, a lower court ordered the tapes to remain in judicial custody until all appeals are disposed of, a process that could take many years. However, a group of radio and television broadcasters and a record company filed a suit arguing that the tapes should be made available to them immediately since the recordings were public records. The Court of Appeals agreed. Although transcripts of the tapes were published during the coverup trial, the court said, "one who listens to the tapes—the inflections. pauses, emphasis and the like, will be better able to understand the conversations."

Lawyers for Mr. Nixon, who opposes release of the tapes at any time, say they will appeal the decision to the United States Supreme Court.

Ehrlichman Enters Prison

Mr. Ehrlichman, voluntarily entered a minimum-security Federal prison camp in Arizona last week to begin serving concurrent sentences for his role in the coveruo and in directing the White House "plumbers," a secret investigative unit. Mr. Ehrlichman's decision to relinquish his bond apparently reflects a belief that his appeal of the convictions has little chance of succeeding.

Mr. Ehrlichman, who recently published a novel, is now scheduled to serve a minimum of 30 months and a maximum of eight years, but the term may later be reduced.

The Presidential Candidates Stand Apart on the Political Spectrum

On the Issues, the Voters Will Make Vital Decisions

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM

WASHINGTON-The rhetoric of the Presidential campaign this year and the attention paid to style and personality have obscured the disagreemeots between the candidates on matters of substance. But President Ford and Jimmy Carter are not like Twiddledum and Twiddledee. There are fundamental differences between the two men on the issues that are likely to be paramount in the next four years. Here is a checklist of some of them:

Unemployment and inflotion: The President believes that inflation is a more immediate national problem than is unemployment. He has been willing to accept a relatively high national rate of unemployment to keep down the rate of inflation. He opposes most efforts toward Governmentcreated jobs believing that instead the Government should promote jobs in private enterprise through incentives to businesses.

Mr. Carter has placed considerably more emphasis on attacking the nation's high unemployment rate and believes that the present rate of 7.8 percent can be cut to 5 percent with no threat of additional inflation. His support of legislation that would make the Government the employer of last resort has been, at most, lukewarm, but there is no question that he looks far more favorably than does Mr. Ford at proposals that would have the Government create jobs on the public payroll for those who cannot get jobs elsewhere.

Tax policy: There may have been many charges and countercharges about who would cut taxes more, but the basic difference between the candidates on taxes is this: Mr. Carter seems to believe that the rich should he taxed more and the poor less with those in the middle breaking even. Mr. Ford betieves that it is the middle class that needs tax relief.

General Satisfaction

Mr. Ford appears to be generally satisfied with the present structure of the natioo's fax system, while Mr. Carter has promised to overhaul it completely and to simplify it. The Democrat bas not been specific about the precise changes be would make, but at various times over the last year he has suggested the following: Altering the deduction home-owners now receive for mortgage interest so that the wealthy would get less of a tax break than those less well off; requiring churches to pay taxes on income that is totally unrelated to religious activities, such as profits on the rental of an office building; taxing capital gains at the same rate as ordinary income; taxing corporate dividends only once, instead of requiring the corporation and the stockholders to pay taxes on the same money and giving a partial tax credit for the payment of college tuition.

Mr. Ford has proposed reducing corporate tax rates and raising the personal tax exemption of Americans from $750 to $1,000 a year. Both proposals were rejected by Congress. An increase in the personal exemption benefits the rich relatively more than it does those less wealthy.

Social security: Mr. Ford has proposed raising the Social Security Tax rate paid by employers and employees from 5.85 percent to 6.15 percent. He would not raise the maximum income, $16,500 next year, on which the tax is paid. Mr. Carter, on the other hand, would raise the income ceiling but not the tax rate.

Under the Ford proposal, everyone in the lower and middle-income ranges would pay more taxes, than he would if the law were not changed. Persons earning $16,500 and over would pay $1,015 in Social Security taxes next year. Under the Carter proposal, persons with low incomes would pay no more than they would without a change in the law. A person making $16,500 a year would pay $965 in social secority taxes, but a person earning $25,000 next year might bave to pay as much as $1,462 under the Carter plan, depending on bow high the ceiling was raised.

Energy: The main difference bere is that Mr. Ford wants to give oil companies considerable latitude to operate without Government interference, while Mr. Carter believes more in Government regulation. Thus, Mr. Ford would like to lift price ceilings on crude oil and natural gas as a means of stimulating domestic production. Mr. Carter wants to continue controls on domestic crude oil prices and would lift price regulations only on natural gas, Mr. Carter would prohibit oil companies from investing in other forms of energy or from controlling both the wholesale and retail segments of the oil industry. The President opposes such steps,

Mr. Ford has proposed the establishment of a $100 billion Government corporation that, through loans and other means, would encourage commercial development of new sources of energy. Mr. Carter opposes that concept, but be would inerge all Federal agencies involved in making energy. policy into a new Cabinet-level department.

On the question of nuclear power, there is a difference in emphasis between the candidates. Mr. Ford emphasizes development of nuclear energy as an alternative source of power, while Mr. Carter stresses the need for safeguards.

Environment: Here, too, there is a considerable difference in emphasis; Mr. Ford has been willing to sacrifice a measure of environmental quality in the interest of economic or industrial development. That was the case, for instance, in his veto of legislation that would have regulated strip mining, in his support of a delay in implementation of automobile pollution standards and in his opposition to legislation that would have strictly limited industrial pollution in areas of the country that are now relatively free of pollution. On the other hand, Mr. Carter's campaign statements and his record as Governor of Georgia, reflect greater stress on preserving the environmen Health: Mr. Carter wants to phase in a comprebensive, mandatory national health insurance system financed by general tax revenues and employer-employee payroll taxes. He has not indicated support for any particular health insurance scheme; nor has he said how long it would take to implement a plan or how much he would be willing to spend for it.

Mr. Ford opposes national health insurance. He believes that it is too expensive, and that it would reduce the quality of health care in the country. He bas recommended insuring Medicare beneficiaries against the cost of catastrophic illnesses by raising the fees paid by Medicare recipients for short-term treatment.

Welfare: Both candidates have criticized the existing welfare system, but, while Mr. Ford has said that the system canoot be reformed "overnight," Mr. Carter has promised big changes.

Emphasis on Restriction

The President's emphasis has been on restricting benefits. He bas, for instance, attempted to raise the cost of food stamps and to tighten the eligibility requirements for them. Mr. Carter bas said that joba should be found for all those able to work and that those unable to work should receive a single payment to replace what they now get from several different Government programs. He believes that the Federal Government should assume the welfare costs of those cities that now contribute to such payments and that, eventually, part of the states' costs should be taken over by Washington.

Discrimination: Both candidates oppose mandatory busing for school desegregation, but they also are against proposed Constitutional amendments to outlaw it. Mr. Carter bas said that he would never become involved in court proceedings dealing with desegregation, while Mr. Ford has permitted his Justice Department to enter court suits limiting busing.

Mr. Carter has supported a referendum in California that would give permanent bargaining spondent for The New York Times.

The Revenue From Economic Growth Never Seems Quite Enough

Economic growth (top) has not provided enough revenue to pay for all the growth in Government spending; thus, the need for deficit spending (middle). The proportion of national wealth spent by the Federal Government (bottom) has remained relatively constant.

Ford, Carter Plan Spending Money They

May Not Have

President Ford's economic advisors have at least one thing in common with Governor Jimmy Carter's. Both are agreed that there will be a surplus of about $60 billion in the Federal budget by the end of the next Presidential term, if the economy recovers steadily and Congress refrains from passing any oew spending legislation.

As a result of this happy calculation, each candidate bas promised that if elected on Tuesday he will be both generous and responsible in his approach to Federal speodiog. With the prospect for the years ahead that of a surplus rather than e deficit, Mr. Ford has talked about balancing the budget through a tax cut, while Mr. Carter has said he would prefer to see "a substantial portion" of the emergiog $60 billion surplus used to finance new spending programs with the remainder going into e tax reduction.

But will the next President really enjoy this luxurious choice? A look at recent budget history reveals some grounds for skepticism, though some for bope as well.

At first sight, there seems nothing wrong with Mr. Carter's belief that higher Government spending can be financed out of the natural growth in tax revenues as the economy regains its strength and more people go back to work or with Mr. Ford's philosophic preference for returning that revenue to the people more directly in the form of lower taxes. In recent years, the Federal Government has been able to finance most of its steadily rising speoding from the ecocomy's natural growth without iocreasing the overall tax burdeo on its citizens, Between 1955 and 1976, total Federal speoding climbed from $68.5 billion to $370 billion. But, when expressed as a proportion of the nstigo's increasing wealth as measured by the Gross Netional Product, spendiog remained fairly constant, at 18 to 19 percent. Though there has been what appears to be an upward treod io the past decade, it largely reflects exceptional expenditures releted to the Vietnam war and the recent

The trouble is that although the Federal Government has financed most of its spending from economic growth, it has not been able to finance it all. And as a result, since World War II, the Federal budget has been in deficit far more frequently than it has been in balance or surplus. Economists of every persuasion consider some of that deficit spending right and proper. Because the Federal budget tends automatically to move into the red when the economy turns down, by pumping out dollars through the deficit, the Federal Government helps stimulate ao economic recovery. Recovery puts taxpayers back to work and paying taxes, which in turn gives the Government the funds it oeeds to finance its speoding plans.

But the Federal budget has often been in deficit during the fat years as well as the lean. This means that Congress and the Administration tend to speod rather more than the ecocomy's oatural growth brings in under the existing tax structure. What history shows is thet budget surpluses of the kind Mr. Carter and Mr. Ford expect have proved a rarity in the past, and that suggests that both caodidetes may find it hard to keep Federal spending in line with

There are other reasons, too, for supposing it may be imprudent, and perhaps eveo dangerous, for the oext President to count too beevily on having this $60 billion windfall to spend or give away. History also shows that even with near constant deficits on the Federal budget, unemployment has remained obstinately above the 4 percent level-which economists have traditionally regarded full employment-except during the Vietnam war. High unemployment generally encourages politicians to spend more in the hope of creeting new jobs.

The Anticipated Income

There is also the danger that economic recovery may prove slower than expected and retard the anticipated growth of government revenues. The forecast of a $60 billion surplus by 1981 assumes a sharp fall in unemploymeot from 7.8 perceot today to 4.8 perceot. If that does not happen, the surplus will be smaller than anticipated.

Finally, rising public expenditures have been financed out of a growing economy in the past only to the extent that the defense budget has fallen. From 11 percent of the nation's wealth as measured by the Gross National Product in 1955, defense spending today consumes only about 5 percent. Meanwhile, the share of domestic programs has risen from 7 percent to about 14.5 percent.

But the Ford Administration is committed to increasing the resources devoted to defense in the coming five years, and there is little reason to believe that a Carter Administration would differ except perhaps by degree. If Congress agrees, less of the incremental wealth created by the ecocomy's future growth will be available to finance new social programs or lower taxes.

Nevertheless, the man elected this week will enjoy one advantage over previous Presideots. The recession and bigb inflation of the past two years have floally prompted Coogress to create oew machioery thet will keep a much stricter check on the growth of Federal spendiog and revenues than before. This does not mean that Congress will necessarily tax or spend io the way that either Mr. Ford or Mr. Carter might recommend. But it does reduce the chences of the Federal budget slipping into deficit or surplus by accident because the legislative branch is not quite sure how much it is spending. That often bappeoed in the past.

Influence Via Embassy Largesse Is Part of the Washington Scene

The S. Koreans Aren't Giving All the Parties

By JOHN W. FINNEY

WASHINGTON-Shortly after World War II, according to Washington gossip of the day, an impoverished European nation-which shall go nameless out of sympathy for its present financial woes-set up one of its comely embassy employees in a Georgetown home to provide, among other things, female companionship in the evening for an influential Republican Senator. It proved to be a good investment. With bipartisan support thus assured, a large loan was approved by Congress for the European nation.

That was not the first time, nor, most certainly, was it the last, that a foreign government has played upon the proclivity of Congressmen for pretty women in lobbying for some greater national good.

Occasionally it is sex. More often it is the foreign junket, the diplomatic party that inflates the ego of the Congressman and his wife, the quiet intervention of the politician turned prestigious lawyer. Sometimes it is the surreptitious contribution. In various ways, foreign governments lobby in Washington as much as the corporations, the labor unions and self-described public interest groups do.

It has been going on ever since the early days of the Republic, Benjamin Franklin was flattered in the Court of Versailles and French agents attempted to bribe American commissioners in the XYZ affair. It has just become more pronounced since World War II; when the United States became the provider first of aid and then of arms, and when American consumption became a critical ingredient in foreign economies. What Americans pay for sugar, for example, becomes important to the economy of the Dominican Republic or the Philippines, and it is worth paying considerable sums to lobbyists to make sure the price remains high.

With its Reverend Sun Myung Moon, businessman Toogsun Park, and parties and junkets and contributions for Congressmen. South Korea is only one of the latest entries on the scene. What just week's disclosures suggest is that the East Asian country is just a little more blatant, a little less sophisticated and a lot more extravagant than the earlier entries: Current investigations are said to involve 90 members of Congress and $1 million a year. What is remarkable is that South Korea has been able to get away with its lobbying activities for so long.

The Washington gossip columns are a good barometer of who is active on the lobbying circuit. One of the first indicators that the Korean lobby was operating in the big leagues came when it was ooted that House majority leader Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill of Massachusetts was given a birthday party in the Georgetown Club hosted by Tongsun Park. If a foreign embassy wants to impress and seek influence, the first prerequisite is that it throw parties. The custom has become so prevalent that Washington now sometimes seems like Versailles on the Potomac. Parties do promote good personal relations, and provide as well useful tidbits of information over the after dinner cigars and cognac. But they do something more in providing entree and a sympathetic audience. As any practitioner can attest, the first problem in lobbylog is to gain entree to the Congressman or the official in the executive branch.

Then there are foreign junkets, sometimes with wives, preferably without. Congressmen are lavishly wined and dined in foreign capitals. Whether it goes beyond that depends upon the whims and personality of the individual legislator. Before he ran into trouble with Elizabeth Ray, Wayne L. Hays of Ohlo used to love to go on foreign junkets, returning with an insight into foreign affairs that he was always willing to share with his colleagues on the House Committee on International Relations. Before he lost in the primaries this year, Otto E. Passman of Louisiana would make periodic trips to South Korea. As chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Aid, Mr. Passman is said to heve sought to use his influence to prevail upon the Agriculture Department and the Agency for International Development to use Tongsun Park as an agent in foreign sales of rice. In addition to souvenirs, a Congressman may also acquire office help; so Sue Park Thomsoo, a petite South Korean, ended up on the staff of Speaker Carl Albert

Occasionally, as io the case of South Korea, there may be contributions. But that comes so close to bribery that most Congressmen know enough to avoid that kind of foreign

Mostly, the fioancial influence of foreign lobbies comes not so much from foreign contributions as from the political cootributions of Americans who are sympathetic to a foreign country. As most Congressmen privately acknowledge, the influence of the Israeli lobby springs largely from the fact that there are a large number of Jewish cootributors in this country to political campaigns. Similarly, the surprising influence of the Greek lobby in the Cyprus crisis derived not from the number of Greek-Americans but from the fact that there are some wealthy Greeks who are willing to make campaign contributions. Sometimes money is not needed to warm up the ethnic ties; the Irish Republican Army is always able to gain an audience with a Congressman who has a large bloc of Irish voters in his district.

Officials of the executive branch, particularly in the State and Defense Departments, are not immune to the influence peddlers from abroad. They just tend to be more circumspect, more circumscribed by their positions than the freewheeling Coogressmen. Last week, for example, it was disclosed that South Korea attempted to give gifts, including cash, to Presidential staff members. The cash was said to have been returned through the Central Intelligence Agency; the gifts were also returned.

If a foreign country wants to be sophisticated, and thus ebove reproach, in its lobbying, it goes out and hires a prestigious lawyer who once used to be a politician or a diplomat. Before his deeth Dean Acheson, Secretary of State in the Truman Administration, represented South African interests as a Washington lawyer. William F. Rogers, who beld the same post for former President Nixon, now represents France, J. W. Fulbright, who as Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, conducted hearings 15 years ago exposing foreign agents, particularly in the sugar lobby, is now registered as a foreign agent representing the United Arab Emirates. There is nothing illegal about this arrangements, so long as the lawyers registered as foreign agents, and it is mutually beneficial. The lawyers draw down large retainers, and the foreign countries obtain a respected conduit for their views.

Until some country like South Korea comes along to muck it up, it is a cozy game played within a small circle of Washington, accepted by most as just one of those fringe benefits of being a superpower. So long as the United States has influence to wield, and wants to dispose, foreign countries will seek ways to curry favors.

In Summary

A Slow Start For the Rhodesia Conference

The conference on Rhodesia's future got under way in Geneva last week with the participants, black and white, reiterating their known positions on the transitioo to majority rule. But most observers believe that behind the rhetoric, there is the possibility of compromise.

The basis for the discussions is tha so-called "Kissinger package" worked nut by the United States Secretary of State during a visit to southern Africa some weeks ago. Prime Minister Ian D. Smith, leader of the white minority regime, bas insisted that naly minor details of the package are negotiable. He stood by that position last week.
The leaders of Rhodesia's black nationalist groups, Joshua Nkomn, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, Robert Mugabe and Ndabaningi Sithole, insist that the Kissinger package is merely a starting point. They also want the British, as the legal though absent colonial power, to be more active in turning over authority to them. The black nationalists are particularly adamant in de-manding that the key Rhodesian ministries of defense and police not be in white hands during the proposed two-year transition period.

The British, with troubles enough of their nwn, are eager to avoid more than a mediating role. Washington had also wanted to avoid a direct role, but last week William E. Schaufele Jr., a State Department specialist in African affairs, was sent to Geneva to assist in keeping the talks going.

The task confronting Mr. Schaufele and the British is to seek areas of compromise, particularly nn the touchy issue of the security ministries. Observers in Geneva were hopeful that such a compromise could be worked out, perhaps by naming white ministers from outside the Smith regime, or even from outside Rhodesia, to the posts. Another suggested compromise was to name white ministers, but to give them black deputies.

Tempers were on edge in Geneva as the black leaders attacked Mr. Smith as a "fascist" whose regime had condoned "hrutal atrocities." But, desplte that, there was an apparent willingness to cantinue talking. The alternative is more intense guerrilla war. Mr. Smith's advisers in South Africa have told bira that to judge by the examples of neighboring Mozambique and Angola, there is no way he can win such a struggle.

A Kind of Independence For Transkei

The Republic of Transkel hecame s reality last week, but hecause the independent homeland for the Xhosa people is a product of South Africa's apartheid policy, the new nation is already an international outcast and likely to

The Transkei is the first of the nine so-called hisck homelands to be given independence. If the others follow suit, most of South Africa's 18 million blacks will then be regarded as citizens of those homelands, without the right to vote in South Africa. But the homelands will cover only 13 percent of the land area, the rest reserved for the 4 million whites. Critics of the plan say that the program is merely designed to maintain a supply of cheap labor for South Africa's mines and

The Transkei's present ecocomy is hased principally on small-plot subsistence farming. Efforts to develop industry and commercial farming are nnly beginning. Domestic sources can provide only about a fifth of the $140 million budget. Most of the rest will come from South Africa.

This fact is behind charges that tha Pretoria Government is going through a charade in granting "independence" to the black tribes like the Xhosas only to preserve the white supremacist state in the rest of South Africa.

The Transkei's Prime Minister, Chief Kaiser D. Mantanzima, thinks otherwise. Ha denounces apartheid but sees independence as s way to preserve unity of the Xhosas.

Most of the member nations of the United Nations think he is wrong. They voted last week to prohibit all contacts with the new government. The United States alone abstained, arguing that while Washington intended to have nothing to do with the new regime, only the Security Council, and not the General Assembly, could impose sanctions against business or dipomatic dealings.

Transkei is the Isnd of the 3 million Xhosa people whose distinctive "click" language was made widely known hy Miriam Makeba, a singer. It is a Maryland-sized territory of high mountains, rolling green hills and spectacular beaches on the edge of South Africa, south of Durban.

U.S. and Hanoi Plan to Talk

Since March, the two sides have exchanged notes, and the diplomatic meeting is seen as the next logical step in the negotiations.

In addition, the Vietnamese are seeking admission to the United Nations. President Ford earlier threatened a United States veto of that application unless the question of the missing servicemen was cleared up. A French initiative put off a Security Council vote on the matter until after the American election, but Haooi is said to want the admission settled before the General Assembly session ends in December. Otherwise the Vietnamese will have to wait another year.

The Damascus Solution

Arab leaders have agreed at a meeting in Cairo to expand the inter-Arab peacekeeping force in Lebanon, but because most of the troops involved will be Syrian, the effect of the agreement is to continue Damascus's domination

Apart from continuing Syria's leading role, the Cairo conference and the one in Riyadh that preceded it also spear to have changed alignments in the Lebanese quarrel, and among the Arab nations

In Lebanon, the Syrians and the Palestine Liberation Organization, not long ago shooting at each nther, are once again reportedly cooperating, at least in a limited way. The Christian militia and the Syrians, until two weeks ago eogaged in concerted drives against the Palestinians, are now apparently on less friendly terms.

The 30,000 Syrian troops in Lebanon, even if they change their in-signia to that of the inter-Arab force, seem to bave achieved President Hafez al-Assad's aim of bringing the Palestinian guerrillas largely under Syrian control and thus making sure that they will go along with any Syrian move toward new negotiations on the Middle East, If the present shaky cease-fire holds, it could also give the Syriansupported Lebanese President, Elias Sarkis, a chance to negotiate a permanent peace among the Christians, Moslems and Palestinians who have been warring for 18 months.

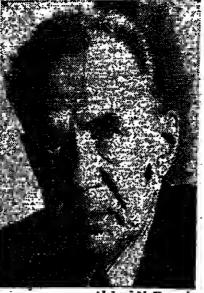

But the Syrian decision to permit a Palestinian unit to return to the border area near Israel, and clashes between Syrians and Christians, who are said to be getting aid from Israel, carry important implications for the wider Middle East situation.

Soviet Approves New 5-Year Plan

In its role as the Soviet Union's nominal parliament, the Supreme Soviet has routinely endorsed the nation's economic plan and hudget for 1977 as well as the final version of the five-year plan for 1976-80. As io the past, the outlines of the plans had been filled in earlier by the real policymaking organs, the Politburo and the Central Committee of the Communist

But last week's sessions of the Supreme Soviet and Central Committea had been watched clasely by foreign clues to changes in foreign policy and in the leadership of the astion. The ages of the present 15 full members of the Politburo average just under 66 years. One of them, Prime Minister Aleksei N. Kosygin, bas been reported in frail health and likely to retire.

Apart from some minor shifts in the Central Committee however, there were no changes. Mr. Kosygin, although in a seemingly subdued role, continues in office. The party leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev, placed continued emphasis on détente with the West and affered a perfunctory gesture of friendship toward the new leadership in China

The theme was one of continued stability and of things going well Mr. Brezhnev told the Central Committee that this year's grain harvest, thanks to good weather, could exceed the 1973 record of 222.5 million tons.

British Pound Is Skeletal

International currency markets are driven hy rumors and guesswork; in-Britain last week there were plenty of both, and the result was that the pound fell to new lows in relation to the dollar and other currencies. ..

One published report said that the International Monetary Fund would demand that the pound should drop to $1.50 as a condition for a $3.9 billion loan Britain seeks. Despite denials, the report caused a nne-day, five-cent drop in the pound's value to $1.59; before the week was over, the value bad dropped another three cents before

There is a growing feeling that Prime Minister James Callaghan has lost control of his party's left wing, which npenly opposes cuts in public spending which the Labor Prime Minister has reluctantly decided are essential if Britain is to regain economic stability.

Officials from the monetary fund are to arrive in Britain this week to examine the Government's programs, preparatory to making a decision on the requested loan. The fund is expected to demand the steps that most analysts agree are needed to reduce inflation, the major difficulty: tight control an the growth of the money supply and the public spending cuts. The question remains whether Mr. Callaghan, with a two-seat margin in Parliament and facing three important by-elections this week, can whip Labor's left wing into supporting the

For the British citizenry the economic future looks bleak, whatever heopens. If the pound falls to $1,50; that will add $300 a year to the average family's grocery bill. What has been an effective devaluation of 26 percent caosed by the pound's recent decline makes it more difficult to reduce the present 13 percent inflation rate and, despite some seasonal gains reported last week, the 5.5 percent adult unemployment rate, high for Britain, seems likely to worsen.

Shootings In India

At least 50 persons have been reported killed in India in riots protesting the Government's promotion of sterilization as a means of controlling the nation's population growth. But Prime Minister Indira Gandhi insisted last week she would pursue the program, probably the most vigorous in the country's history, although she explicitly rejected the idea of compulsory sterilization.

The Gandhi Government bas tried in its family-planning schemes to offending any of the national religious and collural groups. But ble broke out Oct. 18 in a per nantly Moslem region of Uttar Pa State when villagers protested or on them to participate in the ste tion program. In Lebanon, Only the Palestinians Interest Them

Arab Nations Once More Focusing On Israel

By HENRY TANNER

BEIRUT-The Arab governments have lost interest in tha Lebanese civil war. They have decided to return their attention to the conflict with Israel.

The American election is all hut over. The Arab governments know that the search for a negotiated settlement in the Middle East will start again soon either at a Geneva conference or in some other form with the United States and the Soviet Union participating. The Arab governments, including Syria, Egypt, and Saudi Arabia, want this negotiation to take place and want to he ready for it. They know they cannot bargain successfully unless they apply political leverage and military pressure, neither of which they had while they were quarreling in and over Lebanon. They also know that the Palestinian issue is central and that a Palestinian movement, nbedient nut relatively strong on the ground, provides them with the best if not only pressure

Some of the newly mended Arab Mendships may not be quite as fervent as the radio stations claim. But the fact remains, observers here believe, that the Arabs pulled back, at the last minute, from what threatened to become an all-Arab civil war that would have doomed a united front

Egypt, among others, was reported to have threatened to put troops into the field in Lebanon against the Syrian Army if its open warfare against the Palestinians continued. Iraq had several thousand men in Lebanon, but kept them out of the fighting against the Syrians. The Libyans and Algerians, it is felt, could not have stayed aloof if the Syrian-Palestinian war had gone on much longer.

Much remains unknown about the reasons that impelled Saudi Arabia's King Khaled to intervene openly for the first time, to order a ceasefire and summoo both President Hafez al-Assad and Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, to Riyadh. Arab diplomats are convinced that the King's overriding motive was just this fear of an Arah civil war that could only work to Israel's advantage.

How were President Assad and Mr. Arafat, the two main protagooists, affected by the Saudi intervention and the two Arab conferences that followed?

th Control India Has me Success

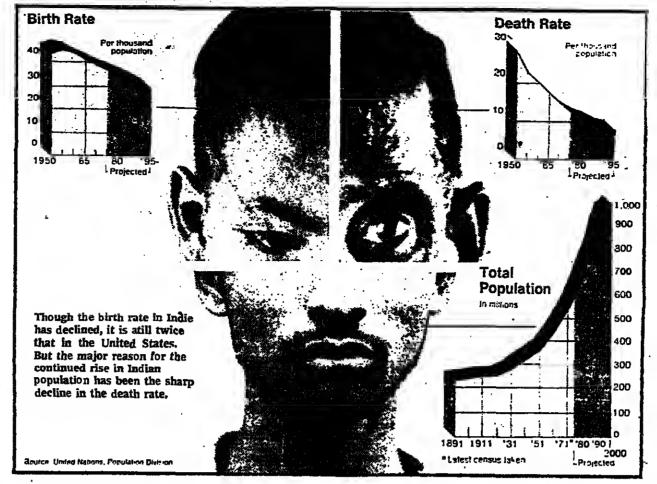

By WILLIAM BORDERS

ELHI—Every morning, as the hot Indian sun rises incient land, there are 35,000 more people living there were the day before. Every year, the population vania. India's population troubles often breed decountry's demographic statistics are among the Iling in the world.

oldered by a new political strength, Prime Minis-Gandhi'a Government has launched a aweeping rol campaign in the last few months and, even forts suggested last week that the program has some violent confrontations, there are signs it ig to show positive results.

t month, according to Government figures, more llion Indians uoderwent sterilization operations; reding six months the total number of couples against conception increased by more than 20

d where taboos and auperstition militate against and pills and interuterine devices, sterilization, the man, has been the principal family planning for years. But it has usually been voluntary, ous degrees of compulsion are being introduced. The Federal Government have published regulating civil servants to two or three children. To strictures to include the general population, drawing up legislation like a bill in Maharashate that includes Bombay, to require vasectomles with of a third child. The bill is now undergoing few Delbi and may over be enforced but the Government has also liberalized the abortion law, and it is planning to raise the marriage age,

Encouraged by the senae of urgency now being expressed at the highest level, some local officials are even going beyond the law. A alum resident who already has three children is told that he must he sterilized before he can claim a new apartment, for example; a father going in for routine medical treatment is told that he will get it free of charge only if he submits to a vasectomy at the same time. In Uttar Pradesh, 50 miles north of New Delhi, about 50 people were reported to have been killed earlier this month when the police fired into en angry mob that was protesting the forced sterilization of some young men.

Prime Minister Gandhi Insists that compulsory sterilization is not government policy. But, as ahe said in Parliament last week: "The program of sterilization and the adoption of all other knowo effective measures for the control of population are important and most urgent."

India is not critically overcrowded in the manner, for example, of Bangladesh, which has 80 million people living in a land the size of Wisconsin. Both Germany and Britain are more densely populated that is India. But with a literacy rate of only 30 percent, and with nearly half the people living at something close to subsistence level, Indians feel that much-needed development will continue to elude them unless they can sharply reduce the birth rate, which ia now 35 per thousand, more than twice what it is in the United Statea In the 29 years of independence, India has registered impressive progress on a number of social and economic fronts. But in case after case, the gaina bave not been nullified by the relentiess population growth. With better utilizatioo of fertilizer, the country is producing more than twice as much grain as it was in the 1940's, but there are also twice as many mouths to feed, so the gain is minimal. With a population of 600 million, Iodia already has almost three times as many people as the United States, occupying onethird as much land. Unchecked, the population will reach one billion by the time a baby born today reaches his 24th birthday.

"The time factor is so pressing, and the population growth so formidable that we have to get out of the vicious circle through a direct assault upon this problem, as e national commitment." says Health Mioister Karan Singh, the moving force behind the new program. Although the program is not directly related to the stero new political order that descended upon India 16 months ago, criticism of Government policy has become rarer.

The drive to curb the birth rate has as one of its leading proponents, Sanjay Gaodhi, the Prime Minister's son, who has become one of the more important people in India. Mr. Gaodhi, who is married but has no children, has made the birth control slogan, "Stop at two!" a recurring theme of his many speeches, and a basic plank in e five-point program he advances for improving India.

Enormous obstacles remain. A large proportion of the recent gains have been made in urban areas, and not out in the backward villages where three-fourths of the people live. Ignorance and a mistrust slow any gains. Many men cannot be convinced that a vastectomy does not cause impotence. When a school in the countryside began giving fifth-graders routine typhoid inoculations, large numbers of parents kept their children at home, fearing that they were being sterilized by injection. To counter religious objections, tha Government has rescarched Hindu scriptures to find support for the idea of small families. Many Moslems oppose birth control, so the Government is campaigning bard among them.

Among the Westerners who flooded into India in the 1950's and 1960's, there used to be an assumption that ooce an uneducated villager understood birth control, he would practice it, so as to keep his family small and thereby improve his economic status. But often that has not proved true. Many poor people actively want to have more children, even after they know how not to, because children will help them in the fields, and take care of them in old age. A Harvard-educated sociologist named Mahmood Mamdani said, after a recent study in north India: "People are not poor because they have large families. Quite the cootrary, they have large families because they are poor. To practice contraception would have meant to wilfully court economic disaster."

As in the rest of the underdeveloped world, the recent population explosion in India was not caused by any increase in the rate at which people were having children, but rather by the sharp decrease in the rate at which they were dying. Because of better sanitation and health care, the annual death rate is now only 14 per thousand, half of what it was at the time of independence, with the result that average life expectaocy increased by 20 years, Unlike some of its smaller, poorer neighbora, India has the resources to be a great nation; already, even in its poverty, there are fewer than a dozen countries to the world with a greater gross national product than India's, and its untapped mineral wealth is vast.

"Too many people bas always been our problem," a Health Ministry official said the other day, as he eothusiastically described what he regarda as a new determination to solve that difficulty. "Now for the first time, all sections of the society are involved," he said. "The ruling party, the village leaders, the press, the unions. There'a a new national commitment, and I think it is going to work."

Iswer, on this point is gloomier. Britain'a debt to lenders in about $12 billion, and it is now asking a $3.9 hillion loan from the International Monetary is talking about even grander, long-term aspirathe money markets of the world. Given even the world projections, the surpluses schieved by oil ($2 billion next year, rising to perhaps $10 billion are already heavily mortgaged to lenders. There lenty of gas in the North Sea, and when the effects re added to oil, things look better. But there is still ceat deal left to play around with if one assumes that the Government will use the money exclusively to pay off the creditors it already has.

Even these projections assume a continuing willingness by the major oil companies to risk large sums of money on further exploration and development. Will they do so? That question is very much on the minds of people bere. Up to oow, the companies have agreed to many government demands, io oo small part because the Department of Energy bas acrupulously involved the companies in the negotiating process. At present, for example, the Treasury, through e series of interrelated royalty and tax mechanisms, takes about 70 per cent of company profits, whether these companies are British (such as British Petroleum), American, or Continental. These funds could mean much to the Treasury, and the companies have not screamed.

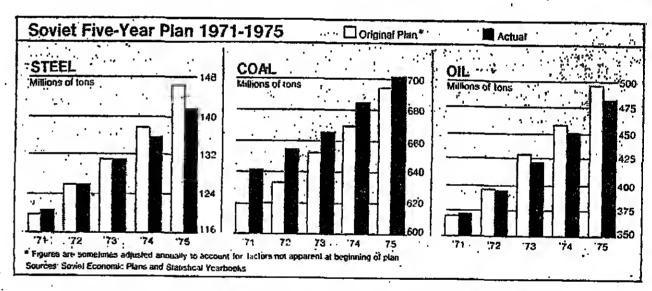

Now, however, Anthony Wedgwood Benn wants more: 51 percent atate participation, not only in new commercial fields but in existing fields. What this means in practice is that Britain, perhaps to guard against a future energy criais or a domestic increase in the price of Arab oil, wants guaranteed access to just over half of anything produced in the North Sea. It also wants participation in company policy, on boards and committees.

Since these conditions will apply not only to new fields but to existing fielda, the leases for which were granted aome time ago under quite different arrangements, some companies are wondering whether Mr. Benn has not changed the rules of the game. Others with complex refining and distribution systems outside Britain are not overjoyed by the idea of selling balf their oil to one country in one place, even at market prices. Still others do not likathe idea of the British Government looking over their shoulders. But Mr. Benn has made it clear that any awards of new leases will depend in part on a company's willingness to rewrite old ones. And tha betting, with individual concessions bere and there, is that he will get his way.

A Good Bit of Maneuvering and Debate Goes On

Soviet 5-Year Plans: Politics And Lobbying

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN

MOSCOW — When some 1,500 delegates unanimously boisted their handa in the Supreme Soviet session at the Kremlin last Friday, they were giving a routine endorsement of one of the few manifestations of legitimate debate in the Soviet Union.

The nominal parliament was acting out the final approval of the nation's tenth five-year plan, which will guide virtually every aspect of economic life through 1980, from the amount of oil to be extracted in Siberia to the number of hospital beds to be added in the Ukraine and the extent of swampland drained in Latvia.

Having rejected a half-century ago the free play of market forces that characterizes economies in the West, Moscow persists in controlling all the decisions, down to the size of new apartments. It is a monumental task for e country as large as the Soviet Union and perhaps inevitably flawed. But there is clearly aome maneuvering behind the scenes as competing factions of the Soviet power elite vie for their share of available allocations, though differences may only surface later, if et all. In drawing up the plan, the men in the Kremlin are also buffeted by some of the concerns that preoccupy politicians in the West.

The tenth five-year plan, which actually got under way last January, confirms that agriculture remains Moscow'a last January, confirms that agriculture remains Moscow'a most nagging trouble. It further indicates some doubts about boosting labor productivity in the face of a potential labor shortage.

Economic prospects have been brightened by this year'a excellent harvest. Yet the impact of last year's crop failure forced e scaledown in the goals of the new plan. The Kremlin is resorting to large infusiona of money rather than any structural changes in the inefficient collective and state farm system. The current five-year plan calls for about $226 billion to be invested in agriculture through 1980.

At the Communist Party'a plenary aession beld by the

At the Communist Party's plenary session beld by the Central Committee last week, the Soviet Party chief, Leonid I. Brezhnev raised the dilemma with unusual candor. "This is a tremendous sum," Mr. Brezhnev said. "I must say frankly that it was not easy to find it. We had to curtail some of the requirements of other branches of the economy."

some of the requirements of other branches of the ecocomy."

Though he did not say so, a good part of the bite probably came from the consumer sector. No fresh attempt was made to orient production away from heavy industry m favor of consumer goods. The ninth five-year plan tried and failed.

With economic development outstripping the work force, planners have atressed more productivity on the job. Tha original draft of the plan last Decembe'- called for a growth in productivity of between 30 and 34 percent. But optimism was evidently tempered by reality, because in the final version the productivity growth target is 25 percent.

A basic strength of the five-year plan lies in the specific goals that the workers are exhorted constantly to meet. In the 1971-75 period, the Soviet Union pushed up its industrial output by 43 percent. Even the smaller 36 perceot rise envisioned in the current five-year plan would be welcomed by many Western countries.

In fact, the plan is subject to cosmetic adjustments. In the previous five-year plan, some targets had to be revised downward before they could be met. The Kremlin evideotly intends to avoid embarrassment by pegging its goals more realistically this time.

Some critics argue that the five-year plan concept engenders a dogmatism that discourages innovation or creativity. This is a particular concern when quality and efficiency have been mada themes of the new plan.

By the time the plan has reached the factory director, he is confronted with an array of sometimes conflicting targets, like increasing output, turning a profit, cutting down production costs and improving product quality. With all these difficult to meet simultaneously, managers end up watching the press as carefully as eny Western Kremlinologists for leads on what to emphasize.

Even success bas its risks. If e manager pushes to overfulfili bis factory's plan and quality for a bonus, his targets may be pegged higher the next time around. The system results in more than a little alippage. At the party congress last March, Prime Minister Aleksei Kosygin disclosed that 18 percept of industrial enterprises last year failed to meet their profit plans alone.

The interval between the original draft and the final version is devoted to discussion and fine-tuning. Theoretically, this involves the workers but in fact it takes place on a more exalted level, including in the official press where the debate becomes visible.

Last spring, one such report in Pravda complained that aome plants were ignoring the details of their contracts and filling their plans through sheer bulk. Pravda cited one construction trust that ordered gas pipeline with a 10 millimeter thickness and was shipped piping of 12 millimeter thickness, wasting thousands of tons of steel. The author proposed holding suppliers to their specific contracts before their plana were considered completed.

A aenior official of Gosplan, the state planning committee, replied in Izvestia that the solution sounded good but in fact might drive suppliers to insist on tougher contracts that would deprive the customer of any real choice.

The Soviet leadership reserves the last word, and even when the final plan is announced, the dynamica of the decisions remain obscure. But the invariably tardy appearance of five-year plans in recent years points to differences of opinion inside the bureaucracy. This year the five-year plao appeared 10 months after the draft, in part because of the illness of Mr. Kosygin, one of the leading architects of the economy. But five years ago, a similar delay occurred. And the 1965-70 plan was not officially approved until it was oearly two years along, reflecting the readjustment that followed the ouster of the former leader, Nikita S. Khrushchev in late 1964.

After Faisal, Saudi Arabia Is Flexing Its Muscles

The farflung activities of the Saudi regime last week demonstrated how the kingdom has changed in recent years: In foreign affairs, Saudi interventions have become sometimes more pronounced; within the royal family, power has become more decentralized; and at home and abroad, the country's growing oil wealth has helped enhance the clout of Saudi tecnocrats, although it has also heightened stresses in Saudi

The gathering, convoked by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, produced a rapprochement between Egypt and Syria and a plan for ending the Lehanese civil war. That plan won nearly unanimous approval at the larger meeting of representatives of Arab League member nations, including 14 heads of state, in Cairo last week.

The Khaled regime's activism was further underscored at Cairo by a reported Saudi commitment to be among the chief financial backers of the enlarged inter-Arab peace force that is to police Lebanon. And King Khaled, whose Government has been trying to promote good feelings around the volatile Arabian Peninsula, also used the occasion for discussions with President Salem Rubava of radical Southern

The internal workings of the royal family are largely secret, but here in the Saudi commercial capital and in-Riyadh, it is widely said that the

As the development and modernization of Sauci Arabia has proceeded, fueled by the country's oil wealth, Saudi technocrats such as Dr. Kayyet have come increasingly into prominence. They are generally often more accessible to foreigners than the rank-ing members of the royal family, and their utterances on sensitive issues draw attention abroad. TURNED OFF BY CARTER-FORD?

Did you choke on the New York Times endorsement of Jimmy Carter?

"No matter how disenchanted one may have become with the negative record and the benign image of a Ford, or how dubious one may be of the undefined positions and the unknown qualities of a Carter, the choice between these men and what they stand for must be made. . . "- N.Y. Times, Oct. 24, 1976.

True, a choice "must be made." But does it have to be a choice of desperation?

Independent voters are balking at the old "lesser evil" ploy. They sense that both Ford and Carter are basically controlled by Big Business and will follow similar policies. They resent the lastminute Madison Avenue TV blitz.

They are keenly aware that both have been discussing trivialities and dodging the real issues. Neither proposes basic answers to militarism, unemployment, inflation, fascism and the crisis of our cities—but both have been quilty of dangerous cold war rhetoric.

You can vote for solutions, for a new direction. There are candidates who advance concrete solutions, who put people before profits-Gus Hall and Jarvis Tyner, the Communist presidential ticket, and Dr. Herbert Aptheker, candidate for U.S. Senator from New York.

The Hall-Tyner-Aptheker ticket calls for-

- slashing the swollen military budget and using the funds thus released for the people's
- ending all cold war policies, thus preventing a nuclear holocaust; strengthening detente and trade with the socialist world, thus creating more jobs; negotiating mutual, balanced arms
- creating 10 million jobs by cutting the work week to 30 hours with no reduction in take-

But in this case the codes and laws are mostly irrelevant. In Morrisania and other poor creas of New York City, buildings are inspected infrequently. The thousand Puerto Rican social clubs that in many cases are the center of neighborhood social life operate informally. These often withered store fronts, and the fire-scarred ahandoned relics of city life, are mainly ignored by the city bureaucracy. Until there is trouble. Now the Fire Department says it will assign men to inspect the social clubs and other public halls. And the city is considering requiring two exits for all public gathering places above street level.

One theory investigators are pursuing is that the arsonist was someone with a grudge. They are also checking insurance policies and other records. The 50 people at the club came to dance, drink and see their relatives

N.Y. Ruling on Death Penalty

A New York Supreme Court judge has ruled that the state's law on the death penalty is a violation of the Eighth Amendment hanning "cruel and unusual punishmeot." Although the ruling is not bioding on other State Supreme Court justices, and the state's highest bench, the Court of Appeals, is expected to make its own review of the statute, the decision last week was important for these reasons:

. It is the first to offer an explanation of why the statute is considered constitutionally defective since the United States Supreme Court last summer found the death penalty fair in some states and not so in others.

• It was made by Justice Peter J. McQuillan, coosidered one of the leading authorities oo the state's crimical law, and it spared the life of Joseph Velez, who had heen sentenced for killing ao off-duty policeman ln 1975.

The United States Supreme Court has held that the death penalty per se does not cootravene the Eighth Ameodment. It struck down statutes that imposed blanket rules for mandatory death sentences because those rules made no provision for mitigating circumstances.

Justice McQuillan found, io effect, that the New York law, which mandates the death penelty for the murder of a policeman or prison guard, or for a murder committed by a prisoner serving a life sentence, was similar to those rejected by the Supreme Court hecause neither judge nor jury mey use discretion to address the different circumstaoces of specific cases.

New Jersey has had no death peoalty since 1971, but there is a pending bill to restore it in certain cases; if it passes, it is likely the legislation will he designed to satisfy the Supreme Court ruling. In Connecticut, a law passed in 1973 allows capital punishment, but does out make the penalty mandatury in a atrict sense.

New York State As Centrist

In New York State, political centrism is the order of the day judging from the results of a New York Times poll. Interviews with 1,335 registered voters from all parts of the state revealed the geoerally moderate-to-liberal mood of the electorate and their thinking on specific issues that figure promineotly in both the Presidential and Senate races that will be decided on Tuesday.

Though New York, like the rest of the nation, has shifted to the right in recent years, the majority of voters are still more liberal on major domestic issues than voters elsewhere. Most of those interviewed favor national health insurance, a Federal takeover of welfare costs, Federal job guarantees, and more Federal aid to New York City. Suburban residents most clearly express the middle-of-the-road views characteristic of that part of the electorate that constitutes the crucial swing vote in the state.

About half the suburbanites interviewed described themselves as "moderates." Their views tended to fall somewhere between those of residents of New York City, which traditionally is liberal and Democratic, and upstate, which in the main is Republican and politically conservative. For example, 71 percent of the city residents favored a Federal health insurance program. For suburbanites tha figure was 60 percent and for upstaters 55 percent. Coocerning Federal assumption of welfare costs, 70 percent of the city interviewees approved, 59 percent of the suburbanites and 49 percent of the upstaters. On the issue of Federal aid to New York City, an issue that more than any other distinguishes the Republican from the Democratic viewpoint, suburhan voters tended to align themselves with the city.

Gaps in the New York System Now Amount to $45 Million

Mayor Beame and Governor Carey flank Dr. John L. S. Holloman, president of the Health and Hospitals Corporation.

New Threat to Austerity: Hospital Deficits

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

If nothing else, Mayor Beame and Governor Carey have had plenty of political dancing practice in New York in the last 18 months. They waltzed around the deepening financial crisis of 1975 before agreeing to sit down and create the Emergency Financial Control Board. They did a less-than-graceful gavotte with Alhany Republicans before achieving an accord to reopeo a shut-dowo City University of New York in June. There was a kind of square dance with the municipal labor leaders before everyone could accept the policy of no wage increases for city workers. And now Mr. Beame and Mr. Carey are engaged io a minuet-which-may turn out to the most prolonged performance of the season-around their latest crisis, this one lovolving the semi-independent and deficit-ridden municipal hospital system.

Everyone involved to city finances agrees today that the Health and Hospitals Corporation, with hudget gaps of $45 million this year and nearly $100 million next yeer, has become a time homb threatening to blow apart the city's three-year plan for fiscal

That the system of 17 municipal hospitals will run out of cash is guaranteed, given its present course. But so far neither the Mayor nor the Governor has confronted the matter directly, io public, out of fear of the bad political consequences arising from more layoffs and more hospital closings.

Their reactions are not surprising, because both politicians have gotten nothing but criticism whenever they have intervened in the hospital situation. When Mr. Carey's staff broached the idea of selling North Central Bronx Hospital, a newly completed municipal hospital, at cost to Montefiore Hospital next door, a step that would heve saved the muoicipal system millions of dollars, both the community end the hospital workers union forced him to back off. When Mr. Beame tacitly endorsed the idea of laying off 1,700 hospital workers last summer, he too retreated in the face of a strike.

Many experts see the hospital showdown as a classic case of the paralysis of politicians in the face of a problem of overwhelming complexity. Aides to the Mayor and the Governor know the general outlines of the solution they want, but they seem unable to effect it.

State health and hudget experts hold that at the root of the hospital crisis is a citywide surplus of 5,000 beds in a system of 37,000 heds in all municipal, private, voluntary and state hospital facilities. The surplus translates into a policy by hospital officials of using every means to keep patients in hospitals, whether they need to he there or not, in order to get reimbursements from Medicaid, Medicare, Blue Cross, or the patients themselves, Many people might have been surprised by the disclosure last week that the Health and Hospitals Corporation would try to generate more income by filling available beds with Medicaid petieots. Others, however, were surprised merely heceuse hospital officials dered to make the policy public.

With the city in virtual hankruptcy, the question is whether the status quo can be afforded any longer. Out of its own funds, the city is contributing $465 million this year to the hospitals corporetion, $100 million to voluntary hospitals and $255 million to Medicaid peyments, a large portion of which also go to the hospital system.

General retreochment of a bloated, inefficient health-care system is therefore the goal of many, but the route to that goel is excruciating. The hospitals corporation has already pared its payroll from 42,800 to a current 36,000 and closed down four hospitals, though it has also opened two new ooes. Its total bed population has dropped from 15,300 in 1972 to 11,750 as of last week, so the corporation can argue with some justification that an additional reduction of 5,000 heds must be heavily absorbed by the private and voluntary bospital system, particularly since many of the municipal hospitals are the only ones serving the communities in which they are situated.

The corporation's view is endorsed by Victor Gotbaum, the head of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, whose members work in the municipal system. For Mr. Gothaum, the relevant point is that the private, voluntary bospital system, whose workers are organized by Leon Davis of Local 1199, of the Hospital and Health Care Employees Union, haso't shared in the paio of retrenchment.

But for meny experts, the most salient point is that more bospital closings mean the layoff of thousands of hlacks and Puerto Ricans. For these workers, the hospitals corporation has become a symbol of minority opportunity, and it is no accident that the beleaguered corporation president, Dr. John L. S. Holloman, is the most powerful appointed black official

It is geoerally acknowledged that only Mayor Beame and Governor Carey have the political strength to briog about the necessary radical changes in the entire city health care and hospital system. To do so means making enemies of an array of powerful forces: local communities, the unioos, the blacks and Puerto Ricans, plus the various well-organized sectors of the health-care establishment.

Already, Mr. Beame has taken a few gingerly steps toward the ouster of Dr. Holloman, who the Cootrol Board says has been uncooperative, unreliable, overly protective of the municipal system and indifferent to the city's harsh fiscal realities. So far Dr. Hollomao has been able to rally his supporters around the charge that he is being made a scapegoat, and has effectively blocked Mr. Beame's moves.

Can we afford four more years without effective leadership?

There is a critical decision to be made on November 2nd. It goes far beyond the question of which Presidential candidate can govern with integrity and honesty. We must determine which candidate has the ability and strength to lead our country out of economic chaos, and the vision to see that all Americans—not just the powerful and influential—have a better future.

During the past two years, the middle class has paid far too dear a price for a President lacking that ability.

Since Gerald Ford took office, the unemployment rate has risen 50%, from 5.5% or 5 million people, to 7.9% or 7-1/2 million jobless Americans. Today's inflation rate of 6% is higher than it was at any time between the Korean War and the inauguration of Richard Nixon.

The 1968 food dollar is now worth

Mr. Ford's budget will account for the largest single deficit and more than 1/3 of the public debt incurred during our entire 200-year history.

Real GNP has actually declined during each of Gerald Ford's two years in office.

And who is most affected by these distressing statistics? Not the Washington establishment, or the economic elite courted by the Republicans. The burden falls on the person who can least afford it: the average American.

Jimmy Carter means to change all that. As President, he will make government responsive to your needs.

Tax Reform: "The average family in this country actually pays a higher proportion of their income in taxes than the average family that makes more than a million dollars a year. That's disgraceful. We need to move toward a truly progressive and simplified tax system, with reduced tax rates for the average American." Economy: "We'll never have a balanced budget nor an end to the inflationary problems as long as we have 7-1/2 million people out of work. Employment needs to be the major thrust of the whole domestic policy of our government."

Efficiency in Govern-ment: "We now have in the federal government the most bloated, confused, wasteful bureaucracy ever created. There's no way to get an answer out of Washington and no way to understand what's going on there. We need to reorganize completely the executive branch of government, making it fair, efficient, effective, and responsive to our people's Housing: "No government that cared about our neighborhoods would stack the tax deck against them. A landlord can let a bullding run down and make a good living on tax breaks. But when a home owner spends a little hardearned money fixing up his home, the assessor raises his taxes. And the FHA no longer cares about families getting started in their own homes. intend to restore the FHA to the time when, for a down payment, a family could get a mortgage which the government would insure. Health Care: "We need a nationwide health care delivery system which will make adequate health care a right for all people."

Jimmy Carter has the strength to take charge of our government. If you are tired of paying the high price of Republican ineffec-tiveness, you have only one and that choice is for change

Ford, Carter Concentrated On Northeast of Necessity

By FRANK LYNN

The three metropolitan area states-New York, New Jersey and Connecticut-are expected to play a major, perhaps decisive, role in the Presidential election on Tuesday. These states have 66 electoral votes, nearly a quarter of the 270 needed to win, and in microcosm show how the national campaign developed from a predicted runaway for Mr. Carter to an apparently close

The major themes of the national campaigns are sounded in all three states with Democrats emphasizing unemployment (generally higher in the region than elsewhere), inflation and the need for social welfare programs and help for the cities. In New York City, for example, the Carter forces have built their campaign around a newspaper headline, the Daily News version last October of President Ford's reaction to the city's fiscal City: Drop Dead." Even Ford aides concede that New York City is now a disaster area for their candidate. Republicans are running against hig government and big spending.

After the Republican Convention, President Ford's national strategists were prepared to write off New York and Connecticut and concentrate on New Jersey, more of a swing state than the other two, as the Eastern end of an arc of industrial states stretching into the Midwest.

Close Race Seen

But that has changed. All three states are conceded to be close by bothsides. President Ford is spending two of the last three days of the campaign, yesterday and today, in New York.

With the exception of the Nixon landslide in 1972, New York and Connecticut have been Democratic in Presidential years since the Eisenhower landslide elections in the 1950's. It's not easy for a Democratic Presidential candidate to lose either state. But New Jersey is not as Democratic. It just barely went for John F. Kennedy in 1960 and was carried by Richard M. Nixon in 1968 as well as 1972. All three states have Democratic governors and heavily Democratic delegations in the House of Representatives.

The usually Republican suburbs in all three states will be crucial. President Ford must roll up large pluralities in such counties as Nassau, Suffolk, Bergen and Fairfield to counter the usual big Democratic votes in the cities in the three states. The suburbanite is usually a swing voter, falling ideologically between the Democratic cities and the Republican rural areas. A New York Times survey indicated that as of 10 days ago, one of five suburban voters had not made up his mind on the Presidential race. That could mean trouble for the President.

In all three states, the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate, Walter F. Mondale, is receiving special attention in the hope that some of his liberalism will attach, in the minds of voters, to Mr. Carter. President Ford's conservative running mate, Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, is almost an invisible man in Ford campaign literature. He has made few appearances in the region, and those in relatively conservative areas such as upstate New York.

m an three states, the Ford campaign is being run by the existing Republican organizations while the Carter forces, who were weak in the Presidential primaries in this area, have brought in outsiders on the theory that they can rise above the internal arguments all but endemic in the Democratic Party in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. However, these newcomers have the problem of persuading local Democrats to work for them. In New York, Democrats appear to have closed ranks for now. But in New Jersey and Connecticut, the divisions in the party's ranks could be a factor in the election.

In each state, the opposing forces have tried to capitalize on local issues and interests as well as the national campaign themes. The Ford forces in the three states are focusing their campaign on an appeal to ethnic, largely Catholic, voters who are the swing vote in the three states. They are distributing hundreds of thousands of letters and reprints of newspaper articles to ethnic voters, "Let Your Italian and American Vote Count" is the Ford campaign headline on a reprint of a newspaper column which says that Mr. Carter is insensitive to Italian-Americans and parochial schools. At a $1,000-a-plate fund-raising dinner featuring the President, in Manhattan two weeks ago, two tiers of the threetiered dais were set aside for represengroups. "Poles for Ford" read one campaign button.

Catholic Vote Important

A Carter aide in Connecticut conceded that one reason the race is close in that state is the President's appeal to Italian-American Catholics. About 45 percent of the population in the state is Catholic and 24 percent is of Italian origin. The Catholic population is 35 percent in New York and 39 percent in New Jersey.

Michael Cardoza, a Washington lawyer who heads the Carter campaign in Connecticut, was one of the more outspoken at a recent Boston meeting of Carter state campaign directors in protesting that national commercials showing Mr. Carter in blue jeans walking through peanut fields wouldn't sell in the Northeast.

As a result, the Carter forces in Connecticut and upstate New York have put together literature featuring a litany of inflated prices of food, oil, electricity, gasoline, housing, over the last two years, with all the blame going to the President

The Carter campaign in Connecticut has also been handicapped by less than enthusiastic support from Gov. Ella T. Grasso, who has her own problems with diminishing state revenues, the likelihood of new taxes and a consequent loss of popularity.

In New Jersey, the Carter forces don't want the support of Gov. Brendan Byrne, whose lackluster administration and new income tax has jeopardized his own renomination next year and given the Ford forces a chance to compare him with Mr. Carter. "Don't be Byrned," the President said at a Paramus rally two weeks ago.

The Carter forces in New Jersey have also been handicapped by the pique of the Democratic state chairman, State Senator James Dugan, over the selection of a Maryland Democrat, John Billett, to head the campaign rather than Mr. Dugan. Nevertheless. Mr. Billett said that the Carter forces were teaming up with Democratic Congressional candidates on a localized brochure that emphasizes jobs and the economy. Mr. Carter may also be helped by the coattails of Democratic Senator Harrison J. Williams, who is expected to win re-election

In New York, the Carter forces are also identifying with local candidates for a reverse coattail effect. One Carter brochure has the photographs of 12 local candidates from the United States Senate down to Civil Court. The cover shows a picture of Mr. Carter and Mr. Mondale with the caption: They'll never tell New York to drop dead!" None of the candidates will, at least not until Tuesday.

The Legislature Is Nearly Balanced, So Marginal Districts May Decide

A Few Keys Will Lead to Legislative Control in New York

BY HUMPHREY S. TYLER

Howard C. Nolan, the New York State Senator from Albany, is a freshman Democrat who two years ago won a narrow victory in a district that formerly had been represented by a Republican, Mr. Nolan's district, the 43d, which includes Albany and Greene Counties, could go either way on Tuesday, and therefore, in political parlance, is considered "marginal."

In Legislatures such as New York's, where the partisan balance usually is fairly even, elections in such districts -which constitute perhaps a quarter of the 210 in New York-are of critical importance because they can determine which party wins the majority. Thus it is not by happenstance that Mr. Nolan and his Republican opponent, Arnold Proskin, a former Albany County judge, are waging a vigorous and expensive campaign. Their district is the typical battleground for control of the Because control of a legislative chamber is so important to party leaders in terms of policy, patronage, power and their ambitions for higher office, the campaigns to capture this and other marginal districts began in January 1975-long before Mr. Proskin decided to run-when the new legislature convened. It was then that strategists of both parties began planning ways to force the opposition holding marginal seats to cast unpopular votes and to block legislation and projects beneficial to their districts. Similarly, leaders in both parties try to insure reelection of their marginal members by protecting them from casting votes upsetting to their constituents, giving them highflown titles, making sure their hometown hills are passed and letting them carry bills that will be popular in their districts.

In New York, at least, the party leaders give more than political support to the "marginal" candidates. They pour thousands of dollars and man-hours into the campaigns, usually at the expense of candidates in districts that the party has no chance of either losing or winning solid districts that have usually been gerrymandered to protect incumbents. As of early October, for example, Mr. Proskin had received $15,000 from the Senate Republican Campaign Committee, while incumbent Republican senators in safe districts got only $1,500, Mr. Nolan has not received much direct financial aid, but the Democratic Legislative Campaign Committee has paid advertising hills equal to the amount his opponent received in cash and, like other incumbents, he has for the asking the services of the Senate Democratic staff.

These efforts by legislative and. party leaders to win the power and influence that come with partisan control of a legislative house are expensive. New York Republicans predict. they will spend $250,000, about the same as the Democrats. Much of the money comes from party faithfuls, especially those holding patronage jobs. But a good portion comes directly and indirectly from unions, banks, business all of whom expect to be remove gratefully when legislation the cerns than, is considered in Some amous go even further and vide workers for their favorite didates.

Curiously enough, all these on campaign strategies have seidom of any difference in terms of which pe controlled a legislative chamber $80 New York. The majority party usually determined by the vote party? strength of the candidates heading party's ticket, so elections in marginal districts and many of the considered safe, for either party often won on the coatrails of dential or gubernatorial candidates lost because voters in one party the other simply don't vote

The Republicans need win: 14 more seats to reverse majority won by the Democratical years ago, a task that is seemin impossible without an exception showing by Mr. Ford in the New Yo suburban districts and some bil areas that elected Democrats in Gov. nor Carey's 1974 landslide Most up perhaps a half dozen seats.

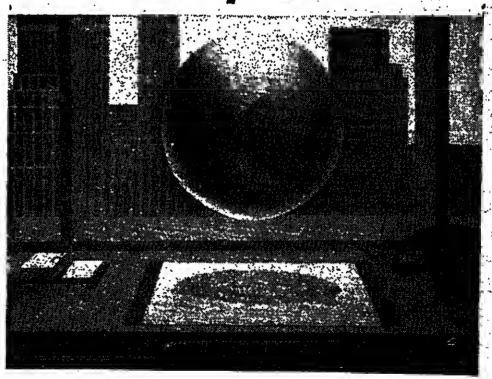

Even this narrowing of the Ben crais majority would probably mill minority leader Perry B. ts - students of animal ave tended to neglect the ...that animals bave mental or mental awareness, prominent biologist has proposed that the oversight be corrected

Dr. Donald R. Griffin of Rockefeller University has put forth the hypothesis in his book, "The Question of Animai Awareness," and in an article in the current issue of American Scientist. Dr. Griffin does not suggest that animals have sophisticated intellectual qualities on the level of man's.

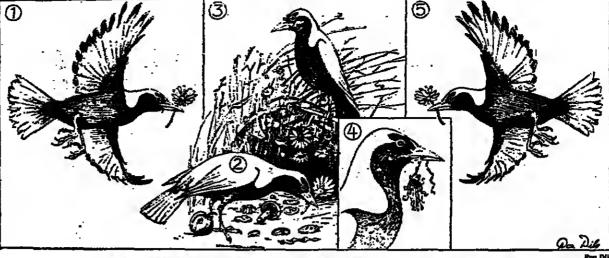

But he does polot out that recent studies with chimpanzees who have been taught sign language are the first instances of two-way communication between man and animal, and proposes that other means be devised to see whether animals have language capacities so far unknown to human investigators. Recent studies with seagulls and with bees have indicated that messages of some sophistication are passed back and forth.

Because language is the medium through which people learn what they know about the mental experience of other people, Dr. Griffin proposes that experiments be devised to enable investigators to "talk" with animals. Such communication, was relatively easy with chimpanzees, which are similar enough to man to learn sign language. But with seagulls and bees, there is hardly the possibility of communication by such means.

Dr. Griffin notes that seagulis have proven responsive in the past to relatively simple models of seaguils, with or without taped playback of seaguil noises. He also cites ongoing research toward developing a model of a bee that could be used to communicate the messages that bees exchange among themselves. By more sophisticated developments of these and other means, Dr. Griffin believes, the question of whether and to what extent acimals have mental experiences could be investigated.

So far, the sign language used by chimpanzees bas shown that they can communicate far more complex messages, and are capable of more advanced mental experiences, including planning for the future, than had previously been known possible in animals. Much bird behavior also merits investigation as to whether the birds can be said to be aware of what they are doing rather than acting on

For example, the Australian bowerhird decorates its mating area with

A question of animal awareness: The male bowerbird (1) selects bright objects (2) to decorate its mating area (3). But when they fade (4) the bird replaces them (5). Does the bird have a true aesthetic sensibility, or is it responding merely to instinct?

and even coins. But the birds also discard these objects when their bright colors fade. Such activity leads Dr. Griffin to believe there is "no reasoo to deny that bowerbirds possess an eesthetic sense although, it must be emphasized, we have as yet no concrete proof that such is the case." In order to find out, it would be necessary, somehow, to "talk" to the bird about its behavior.

The Old Digs In Syria

Receot discoveries by a team of Italian archeologists at Ebla, oear the modern city of Aleppo in Syria, tend considerably to alter the picture of civilization in the third millenium B.C.

That picture has been conceived in fairly limited terms, with so-called "high" cultures those with literacy, commerce and advanced political organizations located in Egypt and Mesopotamia, and little elsewhere.

But the excavations at Ebla have now shows that it was a lively cultural and commercial center more than 4,300 years ego, roughly contemporaneously with the Mesopotamian civilizations of Akkad and Sumer.

Last fall, 15,000 cuneiform tablets were discovered in the archives of the royal palece at Ebla. Many have now been deciphered; and they show the city had a population of 260,000 between 2400 and 2250 B.C. The tablets cootain details of business transactions as well as of military and diplomatic relations with other states.

Of greatest interest, perhaps, especially to linguists, is the fact that many of the inscriptions are in a Western Semitic languege, the family to which Phoenician and Hebrew belong. The oldest previously known Western Semitic inscriptions had dated from only about 1400 B.C.

Moreover, the cuneiform tablets include vowels, which are absect from other early inscriptions. Therefore it will be possible, for the first time, to have some idea how an early dialect of Western Semitic was actually procounced. The discovery is expected to add much to linguistic scholars' knowledge of the early stages of

Only one city in the world, Singapore, has put such a scheme into practice, and the system bas worked well there since Juoe of 1975.

The United States Urbao Mess Traosportatioo Ageocy bas asked 11 medium-sized cities to consider the plan and bas offered to pay for feasibility studies by the Urban Institute of Washingtoo, a ocoprofit, nonpartisan research organization. So far, only Berkeley has agreed to think it over.

There, if atudy becomes activity, reveoues from the "use" fees would be spent to improve public transportation, perhaps by instituting free or inexpensive shuttle-bus service from the outskirts to the beart of the city, perbaps by running minivans along alternate streets.

In Siogapore, motorists pay the equivalent of $1.25 a day or $25 a month for a windshield sticker that allows a car to enter the downtown area between 7:30 A.M. and 10:15 A.M. (Cars with four or more occupeots enter free.) The effect has been to reduce traffic by 40 perceot.

At first, according to senior research associate Kiran Bhatt of the Urban Institute, Singapore shopkeepers were afraid their business would fall off. For two reasons, it has oot dooe so. Many store owners have set oew, later openiog bours to avoid the fee period. Drivers bave found it easier to shop because fewer people are using cars to commute and parking is not the problem it once was.

Federal officials edmit that levying in the United States might require changes in local and state lews, hut they are optimistic about overcoming legal obstacles.

In Berkeley, Vice Mayor Susan Hope says that the possibility of a fee is remote because driver resistance is stroog and because enforcement would be "paioful."

She adds, however, that Berkeley drivers might be won over by exempting them from the fee and perhaps giving them parking privileges that would be denied convesidents.

Dropping Out Of Trade Schools

At a time when large numbers of jobless young people are turning to private vocational schools for help, the New York State Consumer Protection Board bas charged that some schools are promising more than they can deliver. As a result, the board said, many studeots are leaving the schools "disillusipped and frustrated."

The board said there were violations of state education laws in 75 percent of the schools it has jovestigated over the last year. It decried what it called "outrageous claims" about the ready availability of good jobs at high pay for trade school graduates.

The board also accused the State Educatioo Department, which is supposed to monitor the schools, of failing to curb abuses. State Education Commissioner Ewald B. Nyquist strongly denied that his department had been lax.

The state bas 370 profit-making vocational schools that teach subjects ranging from aerooautics and air-cooditiooing to trucking and welding. Tuition cao ruo as high as $3,000 e year, but it may be partly covered by gov-ernment-backed loans and grants.

Many of the 125,000 studeots in private New York trade schools belong to minority groups, come from families with incomes uoder $6,000 a year. and. the brard said, "believe that private vocational education is their last hope to evoid a lifetime of failure." Ofteo unsophisticated, they "desperately oeed protection," according to the board.

The investigators reported that they bad oot been able to find out how maoy New York State students fail to fioisb the courses they undertake. But they said that pupils are ofteo ill-prepared and that the oationwide dropout rate is 65 perceot. At best, then, only 35 perceot of those who sign op for vocational training can realistically hope to find work.

Still, the board did oot coodemn the state's trade school industry as a whole. "Many students each year receive quality instruction which assists them in selecting and achieving a career," the coosumer group emphasized.

THERE IS A WORD

Probably one of the most puzzling aspects of the American Experiment to the rest of the world is the vast amount of power that rests in the hands of the people. And that power is vast. It makes or breaks leaders.

in many countries, the basic concept is that government knows what's best for the people and spoon-feeds it, and sometimes even force-feeds it. Government by edict tends to breed an unambitious, unmotivated and uninspired people. Why should anybody do anything? Change anything? Think anything? "The government will do it." Maybe.

And that's precisely the puzzle we pose to other nations. As individuals we want to take responsibility and decide for ourselves what to do. And when some politician tries to misuse the power we gave him, he may soon find himself out of a job. He's voted out!

And that's the key word. VOTE.

It's more than a duty. Much more than a mere obligation. IT IS THE STRONGEST, LOUDEST, MOST FORCEFUL WEAPON an individual has to be free and remain free!

Every two years the vote can change the entire House of Representatives and a third: of the Senate. Every four years, change presidents. The vote makes governors, mayors, city and state legislators responsible and responsive.

If you think your vote doesn't count, think how much time, money and effort is spent trying to get it. Think of the handshakes and the hot dogs. The banners and the blamey. All because you have the vote. The power.

is the system perfect? Far from it. Does it have flaws? Dozens. Does it work? You can bet your life on it! And if you don't believe it, look how far we've come in just two hundred years. Then look at some of the countries that have been around for more than a thousand.

A Manipulated Human Is Sure Cats Can Think Ahead

By BETSY WADE

Do animals plan ahead? asks Dr. Donald Griffin (summar Page 9). Are birds conscious? Do insects converse? Granted the ground rules of science require that he pose the questions so as not to predispose the answers, but the mere asking of such questions makes it seem unlikely that Dr. Griffin, in the current jargon, shares his life with cats. If he did, only the strongest constraints could keep him from tipping to the positive answer. Of course cats plan ahead, sometimes weeks ahead. They are aware of themselves and their environment, and their manners and demeanor continue to reflect their early lives, despite the stimuli to which they may later be

For example, the renowned Eugene, who are with his left paw, disliked auto drives with an intensity. On Sunday evenings, when the gathering of objects began for the departure from the country, Eugene would do his Houdini, while outside the density of the auto traffic mounted. Each week, Eugene's human friends tried to short-circuit this processhunting down Eugene before rolling up the bedrolls, confining him to one room, collecting things covertly. But Eugene seemed to know it was Sunday. Once, in a blaze of inspiration, he stepped into the most inaccessible part of the mechanism under the aged refrigerator, where he was safe for

All of this could be explained by conditioned responses, with quick reference to Pavlov and his drooling dog, save for one cogent fact: Each week Eugene sought out a new spot, aware-yes aware, Dr. Griffin-that the cover on last week's cache-cat had been blown.

Before the jury goes out, it should also consider the evidence provided by Ratso, the Methuselah of catdom. Ratso came in from the concrete at such an advanced age and so scarred by gang warfare that it was by no means sure that he had not arrived to die. Eventually he revived and after medical repairs he became a glossy, less scrawny animal if somewhat battered of ear and tooth.

As Ratso began his recovery, it was clear what he needed. He needed a nice vacation in the country. So Ratso the Fresh Air Cat was taken to a Connecticut place of grass, streams, wild birds and balmy hreezes. He hugged the porch, would not climb trees and walked on the grass only if compelled and then with visible distaste. He was wretched. He was returned to the city of his presumptive birth and was seldom

What does feline instinct have to do with Ratso's tastes in walking surfaces? A cat is supposed to have race memory of jungle floors, of stalking, creeping, leaping and pouncing over leaves, grass and mulchy things. Ratso, like some Jacob Riis street Arab, responded to what be knew from his youth, although he had no dispute with the Bokhara rug upon which he basked when the sun passed through that phase. Ratso was aware of himself as a city cat and managed to get this message across to the people to whom he gave charge of his geriatric years. He lies buried under a Belgian block-a pay-certainly the cat quintessence of the laid-back character from "Doonesbury?" Zonker appears rather unbright, but he discerns the days of the week, possibly through variations in the human traffic, and is inclined to take off over the weekend. For a winle it appeared that Zonker, like an earlier drop-in, had a second home, but it seems to be not so, for he often returns skinny with hunger. It is the view of Zonker's fans that he goes to a two-day power game. But ponder this: When it is time for Zonker to return, he steps from a nearby bush, and, for all the world like the giant dogs of the neighborhood, heels and walks home with one of the family members. Now that is evolutionary adaptation of a high order.

Cats, who are considered cute in infancy, unlike the more serious looking dog, or skurk, or guppy, suffer cultural deprivation on this account. Humans talk babytalk to them and praise them lavishly for idiot performances. Despite this early difficulty, cats develop personalities that relate directly to the people around them and are generally able to work the household system to advantage. In this respect they appear somewhat like human children. "Colette won't eat anything but pot rosst," says the adult, and Colette knows what is expected of her, be she child or cat. What that is now known by the ethologists—the scholars of cattishness, doggishness or hattishness would explain Colette's passion for pot roast and her brother Bandelaire's taste for small canned shrimp, save the owner's pride in their refined tastes? They know what the audience wants, and they deliver.

A Case History of a News Story and a Denial

By HERBERT MITGANG

In his brilliant analysis of the relationship between artist and viewer and writer and reader in 'Art and Reality," Joyce Cary says that the beholder has an obligation to educate himself so that he can better comprehend the creative individual's form of communication.

"Reading is a creative art," the late British novelist wrote, "subject to the same rules, the same limitations, as the imaginative process by which any observer of the arts turns a mere lump of stone, colors scattered on a canvas, noise, things completely meaningless in themselves, into a formal impression."

The mundane nature of news and the swiftness with which it is reported, edited, printed and distributed do not often result in lasting art. Yet the complexities and codewords of daily journalism also impose upon the newspaper-and the swaying straphanger, reading his six-column Late City Edition-a modest obligation to disclose, at least occasionally, some of the mysteries of newsgathering. Not boastfully but professionally.

Many readers already know the codewords that have crept into news stories. Awkward words like "asserted" or "maintained" are used instead of a simple "said" to raise a doubt about the accuracy of a quoted statement. Sometimes the reporter puts it in, sometimes the doubly-doubting editor.

The reader is also signaled to read between the lines with the cautious "according to" source. Frequently, information derives from government officials or other insiders in corporate or private life who are willing to speak but not to be identified. Hence, the use of such attributions as "according to a senior State Department official" (guess who?) or, more commonly, "according to company officials" who were present at a meeting or read a secret document. Variations on attributions to anonymous sources can be found every day in every newspaper that encourages original reporting.

On this point, The New York Times "Manual of Style and Usage" declares (it doesn't merely assert!): "The decision to permit anonymity of a source must first of all be justified by the conviction of reporter and editor not only that there is no other way to obtain the information but also that the information is both factual and important."

Readers have come to expect that errors (except of a minor misspelling or typographical nature) will be corrected as soon and as prominently as possible and that more serious errors might result in a separate corrective article.

But what about a news story that is printed prominently on page 1, is branded a falsehood by a spokesman for a former President of the United States, and is then followed hy a newspaper statement upholding the original story?

Where does this leave the facts-and the reader? Here, a newspaper reader usually must make his own judgment, basing his conclusion on the past performance of the publication and the credibility of the contending party.

A case in point occurred in The Times of Sept. 29, 1976, with a story headlined: 'Nixon, in Memoirs, Blames Foes for Watergate Scandal." It was written by this reporter and carried a London dateline. In The Times of Oct. 1, 1976, a headline on an inside page read: "Nixon Spokesman Terms Memoirs Report 'False'."

It might be useful—for the general principle of story, denial and the informed reader-to tell a little more about bow this disputed article was put together. For, undoubtedly, more facts about the contents of the memoirs that former President Nixon is now writing will come out before the book is published a year from now. Further denials can be expected. The more information printed or broadcast in advance-even in the authorized, pre-publication, separately contracted-for interviews with David Frost on television the more the book's currency will be devalued.

The article attributed its information to "publishing sources in the United States and Europe who have read part of the manuscript." It disclosed the existence of a 164-page manuscript dealing with the last two weeks of the Presidency and with Watergate. It further mentioned a 13-page outline plus two supplements on Mr. Nixon's foreign trips and contacts, noting that despite stringent security measures, "it is known that one copy of the secret outline got away."

In addition to details in the manuscript and outline, the article disclosed the contractual arrangements with Mr. Nixon and the name of his writer-researcher, Franklin R.

To Mr. Gannon fell the assignment of issuing a statement from San Clemente after the article appeared, saying: "The atory is false because Presideot Nixon has not yet written the section of the book dealing with Watergate. Only Richard Nixon knows what he is going to say about Watergate." This was followed by a statement by Seymour Topping.

deputy managing editor of The Times, saying: "We stand by the report on the Nixon memoirs. It is based on the contents of a 164-page section of the manuscript, an outline and supplements with other details that were made available in select publishing circles." The ambiguously worded denial attempted to leave the impression that all the facts on Watergate and other information in the article about the last two weeks of the Nixon Presideocy were "false," and that the article had claimed that Mr. Nixon had completed the Watergate section of the book.

But the article had plainly stated that the existing 164-pagemanuscript that had been seen was part of the book, and that Mr. Nixon was continuing to work on it so that he could turn in his manuscript to his publisher, Warner Books, on Jan, 9, his 64th birthday. Furthermore, the secret outline that "got away" referred to in the article listed a halfdozen other Watergate matters yet to be written, from the break-in to the pardon of Mr. Nixon by President Ford.

Thus, the half-denial by Mr. Gannon was not even halftrue. In addition, the part of the denial saying that only Mr. Nixon knows what he is going to say about Watergate was obvious but, again, untrue in the context of the denial. For Mr. Gannon and Mr. Nixon's representatives at the Frankfurt Book Fair and at other cities, including London and Hamburg, were dishing out tidbits about what Mr. Nixon would write about Watergate in his memoirs in order to help sell foreign rights to the book.

Interestingly, neither Mr. Nixon's publisher nor his literary agent, Irving P. Lazar, publicly disputed the details in The Times story. Nor did they issue a statement supporting Mr. Gannon's denial from the fastness of the former California White House.

The information in the news story followed two months of research and interviews in the United States and Europe. Direct inquiries to San Clemente, where the telephone is still answered, "President Nixon's office," were unavailing. Neither Warner Books nor Mr. Lazar provided copies of the 164-page manuscript or outline. Not one jots of information was sought from or obtained from anyone on The Times or its news feature service, which holds rights to distribute the memoirs to other newspapers and magazines

The sources on both sides of the Atlantic who read the manuscript were pledged not to discuss its contents. Nevertheless, these sources found it to be a self-serving document by Mr. Nixon on those parts relating to Watergate. This was one of the reasons why the sources were willing to divulge its contents to a reporter. Their names were not disclosed in the news story nor, of course, can they be revealed now, but they are among the most

When the denial of the story was issued from San Clemente, these sources were asked for a comment by this reporter. One said, "It wasn't much of a denial, was it? Especially claiming that the Watergate stuff hadn't been written yet. Sure, there's more to come, but what I

"I wonder what the Nixon people were thinking Blook they said it hadn't been a series of the said it hadn't been series of the said it had been series of the said it ha they said it hadn't been written. Why was a 164-manuscript specifically mentioned? Why not 150 page 200 pages? The Times story didn't pull the exact mirof pages out of thin air," Amused, the source said, ":all, I counted them."

The one copy of the outline of the Nixon book --got away includes 13 pages describing various tagic be discussed, including more on Watergate, a pa-supplement of "foreign contacts" made by President W. a six-page supplement of foreign places resided by President Nixon, and a two-page, single-spaced biography a Gannon, who issued the denial.

The outline and its supplements were obtained reporter in a photocopy and served as a component released news about their filmesses. President Eisenhower is considered to have been the most candid. His doctors released many explicit details about his condition but stopped short of a

There was a marked cootrast between the ways Franklin D. Roosevelt bandled news about his health as a Presidential candidate and as President. Mr. Roosevelt, when Governor of New York, allowed a panel of pbysicians appointed by the New York Academy of Medicine to comment on the state of his health. But secrecy shrouded details of his precarious condition when he ran for a fourth term during World War II.

More recently, President Kennedy took steroid drugs as replacement therapy for adrenal gland insufficiency. The condition was of potential importance because steroid drugs can have mood-altering effects, though it is not known in Mr. Kennedy's case whether such effects were present.

The release of reports of routine check-ups raises a more fundamental question: Of what predictive value are

Everyone knows the classic acecdote of the patient who falls victim to a heart attack soon after leaving his doctor's office with a clean hill of bealth. Lyndoo B. Johnsoo provided one such example; as Senate Majority Leader in 1955, he suffered a heart attack only a few days after his annual check-up. Electrocardiograms disclose evidence of pre-existing heart damage; their prognostic role is quite limited. Check-ups cannot guarantee anything medically. But they do offer the real value of setting on record the predictive value.

Another problem in determining the predictive value of routine check-ups has to do with the nature and extent of the testing involved. Some doctors favor routine exercise testing of middle-aged men who have no symptoms of cardiac disease. Other doctors are opposed to such testing. Neither Presidential candidate had exercise tests. Dr. Ralph A. Murphy, Mr. Carter's physician, said he opposed it because there was a chance the test would yield a false-positive result.

And even the most academic physician could not design a standard physical examination that could assure that any individual will withstand the rigors of holding what is so often called the toughest job in the world. .

Worried Taxpayers Should Vote for Jobs Unemployment Has a Hefty Pricetag

This Tuesday, November 2, the American people will decide the direction of our nation for the next four—and most probably for the next eight—years. The polls indicate that those who view the economic plight of New York City and State as major concerns will vote for Carter, Mondale and Moynihan. Those who believe that continuing massive unemployment is a major issue will also vote Democratic. But the polls also show that substantial members of voters who view the burden of taxation as a prime issue tend to favor Ford.

This is unfortunate, because the issue of taxation is not as simple as saying that one party is for high taxes while another would keep them down.

First: There is a direct relationship between taxes and unemployment. The more unemployment, the higher our taxes. Taxes not paid by those out of work must be paid by those who are working. Furthermore, those who are working are taxed in order to provide food, elothing, shelter and medical care to the unemployed. Economists have estimated that the federal government loses $16 billion for each 1 per cent of our people who are unemployed, and those who are working must make it up. Clearly, Carter, Mondale and Moynihan, by making full employment the top priority, are also proposing to reduce the tax burden on those who work.

An End to Tax Breaks for the Wealthy Few

Second: Taxes for the many have increased because the Nizon-Ford Administrations have reduced taxes for the few. Individual taxpayers now pay a higher share of federal taxes while corporations pay a lower share. During the Kennedy-Johnson years the corporate share of income tax payments reached a high of 35.2 per cent of all income tax collections. In the Nixon-Ford years the share paid by corporations went down every year until it reached its present low of 23.4 per cent. Those who are worried about high taxes on individuals and families should vote for Carter, Mondale and Moynihan so that we can once again require corporations to pay their fair share.

Third: The question of whether state and local taxes can be held down is to a large degree-determined by the amount of money the federal government returns to each area of the country. Those states which send the U.S. government large sums in federal taxes but which receive very little back suffer something very similar to the country. lar to an international problem in balance of payments. The June 26, 1976 issue of National Journal: The Weekly on Politics and Government cootains an excellent analysis, "Where the Funds Flow."

The U.S. Government spends billions of dollars on defense installations, income security programs, commerce and transportation, health, veterans programs, education, training, the environment and so forth. In states where large sums of federal moneys are spent, there are more people earning, spending and paying taxes. Federal spending stimulates their economies.

Northeast a Loser in the Money Game

The article poiots out that in the "money game" there are winners and losers. The Northeast lost, since the government collected $10.8 hillion more from this region than it spent. The states which get the least back from the U.S. are Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, New Jersey and Ohio. Also among the losers are New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts, North Carolina, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Nevada and Oregoo.

The effects of federal practices are illustrated by the National Journal: "If federal spending is distributed unequally among the states, federal taxes tend to make the inequalities even greater. New Mexico is the most startling example: Federal spending there is 40 per ceot greater than the national average, but New Mexico's share of the federal tax hurden is 27 per cent below the national average."

But in the Northeast and Midwest, the situation is reversed. With the federal government taking billioos out of the region, there is a cycle of decline. There are fewer jobs. With fewer people paying taxes, state and local taxes go up. This increase io taxes—and decline in services—impels even more people and jobs to flee the area. This is a tragic spiral of decline.

Clearly, those who are outraged by high taxes in places like New York and

New Jersey will not solve their tax problems by re-electing the same administra-tion which takes their tax dollars and spends them elsewhere. By electing an administration committed to helping economically depressed areas in the United States (not only those overseas), the overburdened taxpayer can hope for some

Carter Pledges Fair Spending Policies

On this score we have a commitment from Jimmy Carter. After attending a meeting earlier this mooth of the Coalition of Northeastern Governors—who are seeking regional economic development with help from the federal government— Gov. Carter wrote to Gov. Hugh Carey of New York. The Democratic presidential candidate spoke of "the oeed to move beyond treating the Northeast as a wayward child and the leading candidate for an object lessoo, Rather," Carter said, "we should view the Northeast as it is—a complex region with immense resources and vigor, which is caught in the triple hind of high living costs, larger than average social welfare hurdens and a declining tax base. A President should recognize," Gov. Carter continued, "that he cannot divorce himself from the impact of his own policies, that the Northeast is striving together to meet common problems, and that those efforts should be supported."

The issue, then, is not which party or candidate is for taxes and which against. The questions are: Who will be taxed most-individuals or corporations? Where will the tax money go-to areas which are prosperous or to those which are suffering exceptionally high unemployment? Will taxpayers continue to foot the bill for high unemployment and other federal policies that shortchange hard-hit areas or will we elect those committed to putting the unemployed back to work so they can contribute their share of tax revenues? Will we choose those whose policies bankrupt entire regions-or those pledged to spend our tax dollars io parts of the country where economic stimulation is nrgent?

By this Wednesday we should have some answers.

The Presidency

Outside the small circle of committed partisans, neither Gerald Ford nor Jimmy Carter may appear to his supporters as the model candidate for the Presidency. But it is political nonsense to conclude that, because the contestants fall short of the ideal, they offer no choice to the American electorate.

The two candidates present a sharply defined difference in background, personality and philosophy. Even a generally trivial and uninspiring campaign has not obscured those differences. It is on an appraisal of those differences that we base our choice of Jimmy

The consistency of Gerald Ford's record throughout his political life strongly supports the view that his accidental assumption of the Presidency two years ago does not qualify him for election to that high office now. During his quarter-century in Congress, he left absolutely no mark of legislative substance. He was consistently conservative only in the negative sense of opposing change. His dismal record of civil rights legislation was undoubtedly the result not of personal bias but of comfortable acceptance of the status quo. Gerald Ford inevitably sought his policies and his associates within the safety of the familiar political and economic compound.

As President, Mr. Ford has remained a captive of these lifelong habits and associations. It is no reflection on his personal decency to say that, following his illconsidered pardon of Richard Nixon, Mr. Ford faithfully adhered to the Nixon Administration's domestic policies. Only a rebellious Congress prevented him from prolonging the tragic and futile fighting in Vietnam.

Even in the one area in which his pre-Presidential experience might have been expected to prove an assethis intimate knowledge of Congressional affairs-Mr. Ford defaulted. Instead of leadership, he gave the nation a negative rule-by-veto.

The personal and political attributes of Jimmy Carter as a Presidential candidate are obviously less wellknown to the average voter than those of Gerald Ford. However, the qualities in Mr. Carter that set him off so sharply against his opponent are his evident capacity for growth, his commitment to dynamic rather than stagnant policies and his eloquently stated belief that America's strength depends as much on the nation's domestic health as on vigilant military defenses. We believe with Mr. Carter that the attainment of all other goals depends on the ability of the American people to work and live usefully and in dignity. Mr. Carter has left no doubt that he considers the present level of unemployment not a statistic but a disaster.

The long road traveled by Mr. Carter shows that he has been able to rise above the limitations and the prejudices of his environment, as underscored by his relationship with black leaders. Few factors so deeply affect the American future as the capacity to put an end to racial divisions. Mr. Carter's appeal, as a Southerner, across racial lines offers extraordinary promise.

Like President Ford, Mr. Carter seems to us too rigidly bound by some of the foreign policy shibboleths that often stand in the way of an open-minded assessment of changing world conditions. But Mr. Carter nevertheless clearly is setting out with a deeper understanding of the inseparable link between America's success abroad and an economically and socially sound, just and harmonious nation at home.

Mr. Ford's supporters and the President's own campaign posture have tried to make a key issue of Mr. Carter's lack of experience. Such a disadvantage seems to us more than offset by the very nature of Mr. Carter's self-made candidacy that should give him extraordinary freedom from special interest and past allegiances. It is hardly an accident that Mr. Carter has been able to speak out strongly on issues of the environment, energy and the merchandising of American arms. These are precisely some of the areas in which powerful special interests make captives of American politicians.

The question on Tuesday is not whether there might have been better candidates than those nominated by the two major parties. The only question before the American people is whether they have been given a choice of leadership and prospective policies worthy of their vote. We find the choice clear-cut. We cast

The Vice Presidency

In the nuclear age, the Vice Presidency has ceased to be a joke. When deciding how to vote in a national election, voters can no longer casually disregard the character and outlook of the Vice-Presidential candidates. The responsibilities that at any moment might pass into the hands of a Vice President have become too somber and significant.

Recent history underscores the seriousness of this choice. Three of the last six Presidents-Truman, Johnson and Ford—have entered the White House from the Vice Presidency. Moreover, because a Vice President stands only a step away from the summit, he automatically gains powerful leverage as his party's potential leader and future Presidential candidate.

These considerations have become so clearly established in public discussion that it is astonishing that President Ford seemed to ignore them in his choice of a running mate. Senator Robert Dole of Kansas is intelligent and served with distinction in World War II. Those two facts just about exhaust the arguments in his favor. During eight years in the House of Representatives and another eight in the United States Senate, he has compiled a record almost empty of constructive legislative accomplishment

Mr. Dole's single distinction is his skill as a slashing. vituperative partisan slugger. He is a master of the wisecrack, the innuendo, the personal thrust. These questionable talents brought him to the attention of President Nixon and resulted in his becoming Republican national chairman in 1971-72.

During the present national campaign, Senator Dole has done nothing to elevate his reputation. Although campaigning for the nation's second-highest office, he has failed to communicate any sense that he grasps the complexities of foreign affairs or that he understands the human problems of the unemployed and the impoverished. Instead, he has demeaned his own patriotic service in World War II by making nonsensical remarks about the four wars of this century being "Democrat wars"-and then helatedly and half-heartedly recanting

Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, his Democratic opponent, has earned respect as a serious, diligent, constructive legislator. He has concentrated on human problems such as health care, education, nutrition, racial discrimination and-most particularly-the welfare of the nation's children.

Senator Mondale is the author of hills on child abuse and on research into infant crib death that are now law. He has been a leader in the fight for adequate staffing of day-care centers. He has conducted extensive hearings to publicize the plight of migrant labor and to try to gain unemployment compensation, adequate schools and other elementary rights for these badly exploited workers. In cooperation with Senator Javits of New York, he was instrumental in establishing an independent Legal Services Corporation to represent minorities and the poor.

A conciliator by temperament and a serious, fairminded man, Senator Mondale can be trusted with the real influence—and the potential power—of the Vice Presidency. He constitutes a distinctive and powerful argument for preferring the Carter-Mondale ticket over the Ford-Dole alternative.

Some Interesting Referendums

All across the country people will be voting on Nov. 2 not only for public officials but for-or against - referendums, initiatives, state constitutional amendments and local propositions as well. Often these fail to get the attended they deserve, but on two issues at least they bear clearly on the national interest. These are proposals to curb the further construction of nuclear plants and to encourage return of beverage containers by requiring deposits.

The nuclear measures generally follow the lines of the proposal that Californians rejected last June only after their Legislature had enacted somewhat milder restrictions. Voters in Oregon, Montana, Ohio, Washington, Arizona. Missouri and Colorado will pass upon measures that, in general, would require legislative approval for all future atomic power plants, based on standards of operational safety and comprehensive liability insurance in case of accidents.

The movement is a reasonable response to the failure of nuclear science so far to develop either wholly reliable methods to prevent radiation leaks or to dispose of atomic wastes without danger of poisoning areas around the depositories for milleniums to come.

In Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan and Colorado, voters will decide whether or not to follow the successful examples set by Oregon, Vermont and South Dakota with respect to beverage containers. Oregon's law, the first on the books, is generally conceded to be highly successful. The deposits required for bottles have brought 90 percent of them back for eventual refilling and, along with the return of beverage cans for recycling, have cut roadside litter in the state by half.

Independent consultants retained by the Federal Energy Administration have produced a study showing that with the degree of success attained in Oregon, adoption of similar deposit plans throughout the country could mean eventual consumer savings of $1.8 billion, energy conservation equivalent to 81,000 barrels of oil a day and vast savings in such resources as glass, steel and aluminum. The chief argument against such discouragement of disposable containers is that it could mean a loss of jobs. But the F.E.A. study points to a net increase of 118,000 jobs nationally.

While a Federal, or even regional, regulation would obviously be far more effective than separate state laws-which might subject some citizens to unfair competition along their respective borders-it appears there will be no Federal regulation until states have shown the way.

No consideration of state plebiscites can afford to omit, even in passing, the proposed curb on the private ownership of handguns, which Massachusetts voters will be privileged to vote on, and the disturbing possibility that Oregon voters will undo their state's excellent landuse planning law.

Passage of gun control in Massachusetts would be a signal to the country that one of the most pernicious of its lobbies can be beaten back, as it should be. Passage of the Oregon measure would doom that pioneering state to the shriveling of its farmlands and, once more, the spreading blight of urban sprawl. The hope in both cases rests on an informed and sophisticated electorate.

Presidential Election: Approaching the Finish Line

Your endorsement of the Carter-Mondale ticket says that "Governor Carter offers greater promise than President Ford has delivered in penformance." The fact is that two years when the President was sworn into office in the aftermath of our country's greatest political scandal, he promised an end of the Inne national nightmare; and, he has delivered on that promise.

He has restored integrity to the White House and set the economic an even keel. He has successfully handled serious crises in foreign affairs, kept the peace and restored our nation's prestige among the nations of the world. President Ford may have made some mistakes along the way, but his stordy candor, his achievement of the Sinai agreement, the first step toward peace in the Middle East, and his steady and unrelenting pursuit of national stability entitle him to a renewal of his mandate.

In the Editor: If Ronald Reagan had been the Republican nominee for President, I feel certain that there would be a host of prominent Republicans, many of whom have refused to support Senator Bockley, openly endorsing the Democratic candidate. As a progressive New York Republican, I feel that the issue is still one of Reaganism in the Presidential campaign.

President Ford is running on a Reagan-dictated platform, and Mr. Ford's own attitudes toward New York City, unemployment and socialissues all echo a highly negative conservative philosophy.

For these reasons, I have decided to support the Democratic Presidential nominee, Jimmy Carter, in this election, and I urge all progressive Republicans to consider doing the same. Mr. Carter represents a change from . negativism and a hope for a new beginning, particularly in helping our city.

After Watergate, the Republican Party should offer more to the voters' than bankrupt policies and Nixon holdovers, but that is all that is before us with Gerald Ford and Robert Dole. PATRICIA RICHTER

Economy: 'We Expect Further Progress'

To the Editor:

Your Oct. 16 editorial 'The Economics of Inertia" presents far too bleak a picture of recent economic developments and the outlook. Given the importance of the confidence factor in a free economy, I believe that unduly gloomy interpretations and forecasts such as yours are a disserv-

In particular, I question your statement that a majority of business economists are projecting a recession in 1978. Actually, most economists are projecting only through 1977 or "into 1978" because they dn not yet have a firm basis for going further. After all, governments, business and consumers do not generally plan their purchases two years in advance. As reported elsewhere in your paper, the forecasts of the economic advisers to the Business Council are relatively optimistic. Those economists expect an average 5 percent real growth in 1977 and into 1978; with the unemployment rate dropping to 6.5 percent by late 1977.

To give some perspective, real gross national product grew at an average annual rate of 6.3 percent between the first quarter of 1975 and the third quarter of 1976. This was more than the average growth during the first six quarters of previous expansions. The unemployment rate fell from 8.2 percent (and a maximum 8.9 percent in May 1975) to 7.8 percent over the same period. The inflation rate moderated from 10.9 percent to 4.4 percent, as measured by the implicit price de-flator for the G.N.P. The wholesale price index for the one month of September 1976, which you cite, gives a misleading impression by itself. The Consumer Price Index for September indicated a further moderation of inflation.

Since spring there has been a "full" in the economy only in the sense that . expansion slowed to a 4.2 percent average annual rate between the first and third quarters. A pickup in expansion is likely in the current quarter, due largely to the planned acceleration of plant and equipment outlays and a quickening of residential construction.

In conclusion, this Administration has made substantial progress in fighting both inflation and unemployment. during the past year and a haif. We certainly do not accept chronic inflation and unemployment as "normal," as you imply, and we expect further progress on both fronts in 1977. ELLIOT I. RICHARDSON

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—It's about time we recognized that the fundamental responsibility for American political leadership rests with the electorate, not the candidates.

We've spent months hammering our two Presidential candidates for being inadequate, dull, superficial, inconsistent-to say nothing of their burdens of overexposure, financial restrictions and proliferated primaries. As e result, they are barricaded, bunkered down, stretched out, exhausted.

If it's true that the candidates should not receive all the blame for nur electoral shortcomings, what about us? How would we rate ourselves in this campaign? Would we admit to being pampered, petulant, indolent?

Our political process peculiarly requires a mutually reinforcing relationship between its leaders and its people. The ideal of our system is that the voters are energetic and affirmative, even proud, about their participation In self-government. We seem now to be falliog down on the job: The pressure is now on the leaders to perform, otherwise we are not obligated to. That's nonsense.

We secretly coogratulate ourselves on our good judgment to be turned off by politics and government. We lament the lack of charisma and excitement in the candidates. We use the Vietnam and Watergate experiences and the closeness of the Presidential race as less, rather than more, reason to become involved. Yet given the inherent strength of the system, the potential and the stakes, we should have plenty of political energy to

Although the politics and management of public policy is excruciatingly complex and we feel justifiably confused about it, we sometimes act as if we believed it to be extraordinarily simple, and that our bureaucratic leaders are deliberately, capriciously inefficient. We do not pay enough attention to the details of public policy to provide informed judgment nr support. When serious substantive treatment is provided by the news media, it is liable to bore us, and when a referendum item no the ballot is too long, we may refuse to read it.

We want our Government to be small and big, to be assertive abroad and to stay out of foreign involvement, to intervene in our lives on abortion and stay out on busing, to increase spending and balance the budget, to arm and disarm-indeed, we have frightened the candidates into thinking that if they cannot be all things tn all men they will not be elected, lo pursuing fragmented self-interests, we may have lost a crucial sense of community. Our philosophical beliefs, such as they are, seem less transcendent and more self-protective, and this deteriorates into an instinct for factionalism instead of coalition, for opposition rather than of affirmation. Thus, we find it difficult to see the interests of the nation as a whole.

We docilely accept too-much prediction, tactics and cnlor that, instead of analysis and thoughtfulness, constitute the basic fare of daily press and television. We're told "won" the debates, as if anyone did. We're told so nften that we're not going to vote that it barely seems respectable to do so. We urge the media to push candidates to be "specific" on the issues, with the likely result that, if they acquiesce, they will merely target themselves as more vulnerable to attack.

It's fun to criticize, and no one wants to be accused of flackery, but along with our journalist friends we find it difficult to commend and easy to zap candidates, and the result is distorting and debilitating. Mistakes are raw meat. If candidates, unlike mere mortels, make one, they're mauled - witness President Ford no Eastern Europe and Jimmy Carter on "ethnic purity." And we damn them if they do or don't-whether we watch Mr. Ford in or nut of the Rose Garden, or Mr. Carter candid or calculating.

Ultimately, if the political system falls short, only the citizens are to blame, Abraham Lincoln told us we were our own governors, and Walt Kelly's Pogo warned us that we may be our own enemy: In other words, we've met our political leadership and It is us. We need to turn from the candidates to make some demands oo our own obligations; at least, at this late hour io this election, to get to the polls. Otherwise, we may be not so much defining our own destioy in the best sense as gettiog what we deserve in the worst.

Despite Gerald Ford'e comeback claims, the opinion here is that on Tuesday Jimmy Carter will be elected. President of the United States by a close popular vote and a somewhat larger electoral majority. Mr. Ford is clearly in reach of an upset, but it's hard to see why the American voter would return to office a party that nominated Richard Nixon three times in the last four elections, a President who was chosen by and later pardoned Mr. Nixon, and who then gave us the highest memployment since the De-pression, the higgest budget deficit in history, and Robert Dole

But voters do strange things. If there should be an upset Republican victory it will almost certainly be because Mr. Ford and his strategists succeeded brilliantly in making Jimmy Carter "the issue," when Mr. Ford himself and his record in office should have been the prime subject of voters' judgment.

On the assumption, however, that Mr. Carter will be narrowly electedit has been argued in this space throughout the campaign that the election would be close-here are the dominant impressions I bave formed of him. They are not based on close acquaintance or lengthy interviews, but on much the same information evailable to any assiduous newspaper reader and TV watcher.

One impression derives from a shared background. Mr. Carter and I are a year apart in age; he is from a small town in Georgia and a boyhood on the farm, while I am from a slightly larger railroad town in North Carolina.

It takes one, they say, to catch one, and I feel reasonably sure that I can detect in Jimmy Carter what I long agn recognized in myself-an indelible class sense, ingrained in us while growing up in the South during the Depression, and fundamentally unaltered by later affluence.

The term "class sense" was deliberalely choseo rather than, say, "Populist instinct" because Populism suggests to ma a more defined ideology or program than I have in mind. Mr. Carter may have that, too, but what I feel more surely is that ba bas a strong identification with the poor, the deprived, the ill-treated, the victims of social, economic or legal injustice. And that suggests the mirror opposite—a fundamental and watchful suspicion of "the interests," of wealth, power, their inevitable combination and exploitative teoden-

of it. Nor is the kind of "class sense" I mean necessarily beneficial; obvi-ously, such a view could produce demagoguery, anti-intellectualism, eco-nomic chaos, and animosities.

On the whole, however, I'd rather take my chances with the class sense I attribute to Mr. Carter than with those who either lack such identification with the downtrodden, or who assert various claims to privilege, or who live by the creed that the race is to the swift and Devil take the hindmost. Only in the class sense that I describe, in my judgment, is there the remotest possibility of moving the nation nearer to what ought to be the prime goals of any decent society-generosity to the weak, and justice for the disadvantaged.

But coexisting with Mr. Carter's class sense, perhaps dominating or at war with it, there seems to be an exceptional caution amounting almost to calculation. Rarely in this campaign has unguarded instinct or visceral response shown through the candidate's studied calm, his usually well-planned postures. That is not particularly surprising in a successful politician, but in Mr. Carter's case cautinn seems so ingrained that one is reminded of John Randolph's stricture on Martin Van Buren: "He rowed to his object with muffled

Ingrained class sense, ingrained caution-together with his obviously sharp intelligence—thesa are the characteristics that seem to me most striking in Jimmy Carter. The obvious questinn is whether, in a Carter Administration, caution would cancel out the class sense.

One early test will coma with Mr. Carter's major appointments (if, of course, he squeezes out a victory). If, like John F. Kennedy-who at his election was also something of an unknown and unsettling quantity-he seeks "confidence" at the outset and makes "safa" choices for the Treasury (Mr. Kennedy chose Douglas Dillon, a Republican banker), the Defense Department (Mr. Kennedy named Robert McNamara, a Republican industrialist) and the State Department (Mr. Kennedy chose Dean Rusk, a product of the foreign policy bureaucracy). Mr. Carter's elementary caution will have woo out and a conventional Administratioo no doubt will lie ahead.

But if his appointments in these fields should reflect, instead, the dominance in Jimmy Carter of a class sense born of the Depression South, his Administration might conceivably produce the most constructive change since the New Deal.

The World And the White House

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS-The only good thing about the United States election as viewed from abroad is that one of the candidates has to lose. They have recently been hammering away at each other on matters of foreign policy that neither shows impressive evidence of understanding.

Quite obviously it is less a question of persuading nations overseas of the wisdom of one or the other on world effairs. The appeal is directed at ethnic minorities in the U.S.A. itself-because foreigners don't vote. The olla-podrida cooked in the American melang pot has been a matter of internal political concern since the mass emigrations from revo-Iutionary Europe of 1848. In recent decades, however, the ethnic emphasis has shifted somewhat.

Neither Jerry Ford nor Jimmy Carter took the usual pre-convention tour of the Three "I" League-Italy, Ireland and Israel, Nevertheless, Italo-American, Irish-American and Jewish-American sentiments are still carefully. addressed aithough there is increased focus on Afro- and Slavic-Americans.

Ford and Carter each spoke recklessly on Eastern Europe. The President mixed up his footwork and his dental work when he said the area was not under Soviet domination. This was a boost for Carter until the ex-Governor stuck his nose into the affairs of Yugoslavia, a country he was possibly not well acquainted with. He announced that if he were hoss we wouldn't go to war should Minscow try to seize that nation. Fortunately, most foreign chanceries comprehend our eccentricities and know there is a difference between what Americans vote for and what they get. Nowadays, many Americans wonder whether habits established by the Founding Fathers in a horse-and-buggy age must still govern electoral rules. Foreigners aren't even doubtful.

They think our elections should be more related to factual actualities than to ethnic prejudices when overseas matters are discussed. Above all, they want shorter American campaigns because Washington's policy is habitually paralyzed once every four years. Thus, io 1976, we see canel negotiations with Panama frozen stiff; our participation in Southern African affairs abcuptly souped up, then quieted, until we see where the black vote goes; statements oo Italy (especially Communist Party) confused according to what politicians calculate will appeal to Italo-Americans.

Since the dreary television debates, both Ford and Carter have been more under the control of party diplomatic experts and therefore less inclined to rush in where advisory angels fear to tread. The President has benefited from this phase more than his rival.

Ford has tried to extricate himself from the mire of confusion he gnt stuck in when discussing Communist East Europe. But Carter has kept on recklessly making statements on subjects he is not yet versed in, like

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia and Ireland. He insists Yugoslavia is not important enough to American interests to fight for, although even the Italian Communists (who frighten him less than Ford) are worried sick about their neighbor's future after Tito dies.

Also, Carter has made sonorous threats about how he would apply a counter-embargo against any Arab oil embargo. If he becomes President and such a boycott starts, he might find it difficult to go it alone; yet it is sure that Western Europe or Japan wouldn't merrily follow him along that course.

All these arguments, often innocent of wisdom, puzzle more than amuse people overseas. But foreign lands have to postulate certain assumptions anyway. For example, a well-known chief of government recently observed to me: "I wonder if Moscow would prefer a Polish Secretary of State to German Secretary of State-I doubt it." Of course, he was referring to Zbigniew Brzezinski, one of Carter's chief fareign policy counselors, and

The chances are neither may be Secretary next year regardless of whn wins. The real warry abroad is that if Carter is the victor—regarded as likely by London's leading betting brokers it will mean another shakedown cruise while a new American President bones up on the rudiments of foreign policy.

After all, the only chief executives since Herbert Hnover who entered the White House with any advanced training in this arcane field were Dwight D. Eisenhower and Richard M. Nixon. And many people forget that -although the former is not admired as a great President and the latter is condemned as an amoral one -in this realm both did well.

National health policy needs intensive care.

When Congress reconvenes in January it will once again resume the continuing debate over a national health program. We think the fundamental issue now to be resolved is how our country is to reallocate its resources to best provide adequate health care for all.

Some favor a strict reliance on laissez-faire. Some favor the other extreme, an organized comprehensive national health program. Either way, this issue is complex. It is so fied up with our society's emerging recognition of health care as a fundamental right that a retional resolution is unlikely without careful analysis and planning.

American Medicorp is one of the most successful companies in the burgeoning and rather special business of hospital management. As a primary health-care provider we have unusual practical insight Into what is necessary to develop effective national health policy.

We own and manage 46 hospitals across the nation, from Oregon to Florida. Revenues of our publicly-owned company will approach $400,000,000. this year, though we ere less than nine years old. Our facilities are primary providers of hospital care and services in communities where over 10,000,000

It is this first-hand day-to-day experience that forms the basis of our deep concern about national health policy.

Consider the government's first major effort to subsidize health care, the well-intentioned Medicare and Medicaid programs enacted in 1965. Because of insufficient analysis and planning, these programs have resulted in unprecedented costs that were not predicted a decade ego.

Why is American Medicorp so concerned about the planning of this nation's haalth-care future? Because we stake our vary future as a corporation on intelligent planning to operate our own large and complex health delivery system. We know it works. Without it-chaos.

American Medicorp urges Congress and the Administration to include sound planning provisions in every national health program under consideration based on the capabilities of each, A basic package of affordable health-care services is made available to all Americans, and A Providers ere given incentives to perform and are measured by the quality as well as the cost of patient care they deliver.

When it comes right down to it, America must have intensive planning intensive care — for its national health program. If we are doomed to repeat the mistakes of the last decade, we will waste more and more of our precious and limited resources for a return that is uncertain.

by Eli in 14-6 Game

NEW HAVEN, Oct, 30-Two short scoring plunges by John Pagliaro and pass receptions by John Spagnola sent Yale to an early lead and the Eli defense stood up for a 14-6 lvy League victory today over Cornell.

Sieve Skrovan a safetyman and Kurt Nondorf, a defensive back, each intercepied two passes by the Cornell quarterback, Jim Hofher. The Yale line also staged a dramatic goal-line stand to thwart a last-minute Big Red drive.

Yale struck first, advancing from its 36 in four plays including a pass from Stone Phillips to Spagnola that ended on the Cornell 2, setting up Pagliaro's first score.

Late in the oeriod Skrovan intercepted a pass by Hofher on the Yale 33 and ran to the 46. After a clipping penalty, Yale mounted an eight-play scoring drive sparked by a 17-yard pass to Spagnola and a 20-yard aerial play to Greg Hall, the right end. Pagliaro then punched over from 1 yard out for the touchdown, his eighth in three games and 12th this year.

Cornell scored on a 9-yard run by Tim LaBeau early in the fourth period but the conversion failed on a bad

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 30-Dartmouth kept its Ivy League title hopes alive this gray afternoon on Memorial Field by defeating Columbia, 34-14, before 10.600 fans.

The victory was Dartmouth's fifth in succession over the injury-plagued Lions, its third triumph in five league games this season and its fifth in seven starts over ail.

Dartmouth scored 17 points in each half and got three touchdowns as a result of Columbia fumoles. The Lions were their own worst enemy. Twice they had excellent scoring opportunities, in the second quarter and in the fourth, but they gave up the ball deep in Dartmouth territory,

Fifth Loss for Lions

Had it not been for Columbia's ballhandling failures, this would have been a much different game. Instead, the Lions were easily sent to their fourth league defeat and fifth of the campaign over all. They bave won only two games, one in the league.

What made the task all the more difficult for Columbia was that 10 players, half of thm first-string performers, did not play. They are lost for the season. Dartmouth played without three regular starters, but the Big Green bad the depth and the quality, and these spelled the difference.

The Big Green team got a spectacular performance from Sam Coffey.

PRINCETON, N.J., Oct. 30-Pennsylvania marched 64 yards in eight plays and scored on a pass with only 17 seconds remaining to beat Princeton, 10-9, today.

The winning touchdown was scored by Bill Cioffredi, a sophomore from Rutland, Vt. The 185-pound halfback carryed a 6-yard pass from Bob Graustein and then bulled the remaining 3 vards into the end zone for the game's only touchdown.

The tingling finish provided Penn with its first straight victory over Princeton in Ivy Conference play. But this one wasn't easy because Princeton made good use of the "foot" in football, kicking three field goals for a 9-3 lead.

Two of them field goals, made by Paul Zoubek, the Tigers' second stringfield goal kicker, enabled the home team to lead through most of tshe second helf after the teams had left Palmer Stadium's field at intermission tied, 3-

The deadlock at this stage semed fitting since both hed entered the game with Identical league records of two victories and two defeats. But in the second half of the game, which marked the 100th anniversary of the first meeting betwee the schools, the Quakers seemed bent on losing on their own mistakes.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 30-Brown may finally win its first Ivy League football championship this year.

This became a mighty strong possibility today when the Bruins, who have been so close so often in recent Ivv seasons, rallied in the second half and defeated Harvard, 16-14, at Harvard Stadium. The victory over the Crimson, the defending Ivy League champion, was celebrated as if it were the most important in Brown football history. It may be.

The victory came by uphill work and wasn't assured until the last few moments after Harvard had scored a touchdown with 81 seconds to play, When Brown corralled the following short kickoff, the Bruins nailed down their best chance at an Ivy title since the formal inception of an lay roundrobin in 1956.

Brown Takes 9-7 Lead

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., Oct. 30-Rutgers University, harboring the football team with the nation's longest collegiate wining streak, observed Family Day today, and fater the members of that team got rid of some peaky ants, they enjoyed the afternoon as if they indeed were on a family picnic. With a well-timed punt block by Earl Williams, a sophomore, serving as the catalyst. Rutgers whipped Massachusetts, 24-7, and extended its winning streak to 15 games, eight this season.

Dino Mangiero, a freshman tackle, converted Williams's second - quarter block into s touchdown that snapped a 7-7 tie and put the 5carlet Knights ahead to stay.

Minutemen Yardage Negated

Massachusetts, a National Collegiate Athletic Association Divisioo II team with a 4-2 won-lost record, never really threatened Rutgers' winning streak, but the Minutemen did startle the Scarlet Knights with a touchdown the second time they had the ball.

But in the second and third quarters, besides scoring the go-ahead touchdown, the Rutgers' defense totally thwarted the Massachusets offensive-attack. In those 30 minutes of play, the Minutemen gained a net of 20 yards on offense and that yardage was effectively negated by an equal 20 yards in penalties. In other words, Massachusetts went absolutely nowhere io the middle portioo of the game. Over all, the Minutemen fared about the same as Rutgers' previous seven opponents this season. They scored 7 points, compared with Rutgers' average of 6.4 points allowed per game, and

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 30 (AP)-Rick Leach ran for two touchdowns and passed for two more today to lead Michigan to a 45-0 Big Ten rout of Minnesota in their annual Little Brown Jug clash.

Leach scored on runs of 28 and 6 yards in the second and third quarters, respectively. The sophomore quarterback also threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to his fullback, Rob Lytle, in the second period, and hit his wingback, Jim Smith, with a 22-yard TD aerial in the third.

Leach wound up with 114 yards rushing on 10 carries while Lytle, who also ran at tailback, ground out 129 yards on 20 carries.

Lytle also tallied on a 2-yard run in the final period, four plays after Dwight Hicks returned n intercepted Tony Dungy pass 51 yards to the Minnesota

In the final quarter mile of the seven-furlong sprint, it was My Juliet who drew away steadily from heavily favored Bold Forbes. At the finish, she was two lengths to the good. And male chauvinists in the crowd of 26,960 were wondering how they could have allowed her to go to the post at 9 to 1. She paid $20.20 for $2 to win, despite the remarkabla credentials she carried into the race.

Turns on the Speed

Bold Forbes, the I-to-2 choice, didn't even managed to keep his unofficial second-place finish. He was disqualified and placed third for bearing out in the stretch and impeding It's Freezing, who was moved up to second after finishing third.

Aqueduct, Geirge Weasel Jr.'s -yearold filly nailed down an Eclipse Award as the year's champion aprinter by winnig the $53,300 Vosburgh Handicap. To do it, she had to survive a speed duel with Bold Forbes, the frontrunning winner of this season's Kentucky Redrby and Belmon Stakes.

It's a good thing there weren't any traffic cops patrolling the backstretch. My Juliet probably would have got a ticket for speeding. Leading every step of the way, she ran the first quarter in .22 3/5, the half in .44 3/5 and six furlongs in I.08 3/5. Her final time was 1.21 4/5, slower than the stakes and track record of 1.20 1/5 held by Dr. Fager but more than fast enugh to get the job done.

"Ha never did seem to take hold of "I had a good hold on her early," said Tony Black, the out-of-state the bit," said Cordero. "He was not iockey who came in to ride My Juliet, himself today."

took a consistently critical view of our playing games at night. Because of the pervasiveness and sharpness of 'this criticism, I thought it would be helpful to give a fairly detailed statement of baseball's position. The basic argument advanced by various Times writers was that the National Broadcasting, Company was in fact making the decisions for baseball.

That argument simply is not correct. Before reviewing the pertinent facts, I would like to try to put the overall problem into some kind of perspective that may explain why the debate is such an acid one. Fundamentally, this is not a dispute between the Times and baseball but rather is one between television and print journalism, where I think you would concede that compe-tition is in general quite spirited. Accommodation by baseball of one is apt to enrage the other—a fact we have discovered through painful experience.

This is not a theory I have imagined for the purpose of debate but one that various veteran newspapermen have privately conceded to me over the years. Indeed, we are caught, in a crossfire between the combatants in struggle that has resulted in the death of many fine newspapers.

Our problem is complicated by the fact that both media are extremely important to us and we must try to serve both to protect the vigor of our game. Over the long history of pro-fessional baseball, the coverage given us by newspapers has been vital to

. In a business that has the financial problems of baseball, it is imperative that we increase our revenues wherever possible . . ."

our success and we are keenly aware of it. Even today, with the great growth of other sports, I imagine baseball receives substantially mnre linage than any other professional sport. We bave responded by providing a variety of accommodations in our parks to the press and in gen-eral have sought to facilitate their

At the same time, we cannot ignore the communications values available to us through television. About 60 percent of our regular-season games are televised, as are all of our national events (All-Star, league championship and World Series). We think that tele-vising these games has proved an important and necessary source of locome for baseball and has been an invalu-able service to our fans as well as an invaluable promotion of baseball.

As an example, for years all of our-national events bave been telecast in the city where the game is played, even where the park is not sold out, so as to assure all fans of being able to see the games in the event they cannot attend. As with the newspapermen, we try to provide services that will permit television to do an effective lob of putting the pictures of our games be-

But we have not and cannot cede to either medium the right to control our game. Which brings me to the fact about NBC and night World Series

The first World Series night telecast was in 1971. It occurred in the fourth game of the Baltimore-Pitisburgh Series and it came about not because NBC had sought it, but because we were convinced that a night telecast would be beneficial for baseball and its fans. The fact is that NBC resisted this change. Nonetheless, the resolts were spectacular. The telecast produced the largest audience we had ever had for a baseball game. As a result of this success we were able to persuade NBC to expand the night-time schedule to three games in 1972 and thereafter. These, of course, were weekday games. This was our decision and initiative and we set the time of the games.

76 Million Saw Seventh Game

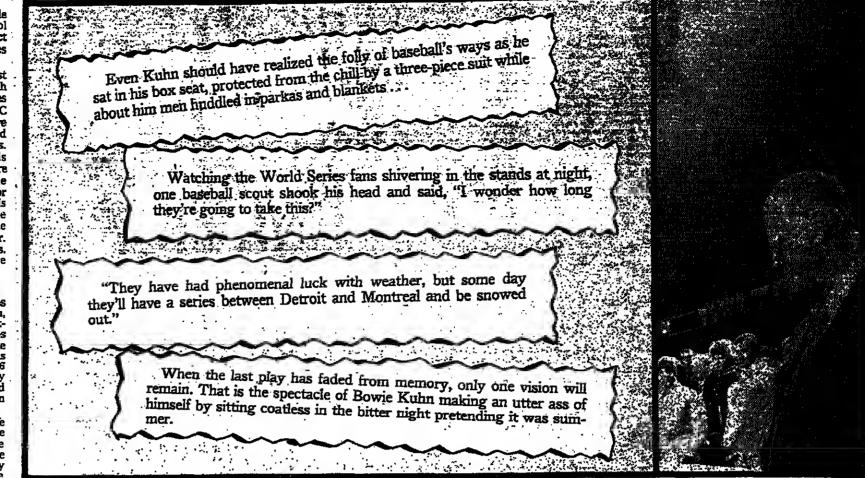

The high-water mark of night games came in the 1975 World Series when, because of rainouts on the final weekend of the Series, a total of five games were played at night. The average audience for these night games was 63 million people. An incredible 76 million watched the seventh game. By contrast, the audience for the second game of the 1975 World Series on unday afternoon was 43 million.

While our conclusions about the value of these games is strongly borne out by the fan mail we received, some have criticized night games because of weather considerations. They say that it may be too chilly in some locations at night. The fact of the matter is that October weather in most of nur cities is pretty good and temperature studies show that ynu can normally anticipate evening temperatures that are suitable for baseball, certainly as suitable as temperatures at which we frequently play games in April, May, September and even June. Only in July and August are you pretty well assured of shirtsleeve weather. In an extreme case of cold weather. we would call the game, just as we would for rain. Moreover, the weather factor actually favors playing some weekend night games.

The American public likes to get outside and enjoy October weather on weekends. There are many things in do, including travel, boating, picnics and innumerable other forms of outdoor recreation. At night the public is ready to slt down and watch tele-vision, and that is precisely why our audience is so much bigger.

Growing Financial Burden Another factor is the need to promote our game. Before World War baseball took its success pretty much for granted and there was no particular need for promotion. Today, baseball is probably faced with more competition than any other sport and competition comes particularly from all those warm-weather outdoor recreations that I have described. In order for the game to succeed, it is vital that we promote, and nighttime World Series games provide the best vehicle we bave for promotion. At the risk of repeating, this was emphatically demonstrated by the enormous impact the 1975 World Series, with five night games, had on the American public. I feel certain it played a role in our large attendance gains in 1976, which were achieved even though our races were not outstanding.

The success of night-time baseball in the World Series bas also significantly increased the value of the rights for these games. In a business that bas the financial problems of baseball, it is imperative that we increase our revenues whenever possible so as to promote stability and competitive balance. There is reason to believe that these financial problems will become even more acute. We have tried and, I think succeeded, in keeping our ticket prices down and have kept baseball the best buy in en-tertainment four our fans. Keeping those prices down obviously increases the pressure to develop additional income

The Times was particularly critical of Game 2 being telecast Sunday night, because the night was chilly and the decision was allegedly made by NBC. Let me make these points:

Football and Politics

I. The afternoon was chilly, tooabout 5 degrees different at 1 P.M. than 8:30 P.M. Day or night, the game would have been played in the 40's. The fact is that this was an abnormally cool day for this time of year in Cincinnati.

2. The game was an experiment jointly agreed to by NBC and baseball. We did so because we both wanted as large an audience as possible—each for our own reasons.

3. NBC would have carried the game

4. The national television audience was 50 pecent (or about 22 million peo-ple) larger than Game 2 of the great 1975 World Series, which was televised The Times also asserted that the Sun-day game was scheduled at night to avoid a confrontation with pro football. This is really rather silly. We have been televising World Series games for years against Sunday football, with excellent rating results for baseball.

The Times also said that the resched-uling of Game 5 at 6 P.M. Friday was a "gimmick" for NBC. The network recognized that the starting time was our decision and its only request of us was to let NBC know as soon as possible what time we selected. We selected 6 P.M. as the fairest time for fans who had bought night-time tickets and for television fans across the country. I also consulted with the television advisors to President Ford and Governor Carter because of possible conflict with the 9:30 Presidential debate that night. Both advisors and candidates understood that 6 P.M. would give the best chance to working fans across the country to see the game and made no objection. Of course, the four-game Reds sweep made it unnecessary to play Game 5.

What particularly troubles me about the Times's position on these matters was its failure to recognize the com-plexity and two-sidedness of the prob-lems presented. I certainly recognize there are many factors to be balanced and am genuinely looking for improve-ments. All of which still leaves me with the uneasy feeling that I am caught between two enormously powerful media forces and I had better keep my batting helmet low on my brow.

World Series Winner Key to the Presidency?

The 1976 World Series ended with the National League team, the Cincinnati Reds, beating the American League team, the New York Yankees. As an enthusiastic supporter of Jackie Rubinson, the Brooklyn Dongers and consequently the National League, I of course was happy that "my team" had won. However, this year, in addition to viewing the World Series as strictly a sports event, there were important national political consequences as a result of the outcome.

At a Bicentennial celebration in New York on the Fourth of July, I was ex-plaining that if someone grew up on the streets of Brooklyn in the early 50' and was a baseball fan, he could tell their politics from the team they rooted for among the Dodgers, Giants and Yankees. One listener, Jon Margolis, who turned out to be a Washington correspondent for The Chicago Tribune and an avid baseball fan, threw back to me a more startling and per-haps more important political-sports theory. Jon claimed that if in a Presidential election year the National League team beat the American League team in the World Series, the Demo-crats would win the election. If the American League team won, then the Republicans would win.

Just Watch the Series. It sounded right. The National League, —the league of Jackie Robinson, the Dodgers, Ebbets Field—seemed more in tune with the philosophy and make-up of the Democratic Party than the Republican Party. Likewise, the American League—the league of Mickey Mantle, the Yankees, Yankee Stadium -seemed more in tune with the philos-sophy and make-up of the Republican

Kennedy, Bradley and the N.B.A. Years

By WALTER KENNEDY

Over the last 50 years, I must bava read every book that has been published about basketball, including clinical pamphlets on the elementary and secondary school levels. Since most of these were read prior to 1963 when I became commissioner of the National Basketball Association, it might be said that these publications gave me a good "feel" for the sport I was to administer for 12 years.

During the period from 1963 to 1975; when I retired, as the N.B.A. grew from nine to 18 teams and particularly after the New Ynrk Knickerbockers won their first title, it seemed that everyone in basketball was writing books. This gave me additional opportunities to add to my store of information about my favorite sport. Last summer, while convalescing in the bospital from major surgery, I re-ceived a copy of Bill Bradley's book. "Life on the Run." Rather than reading it at bedside, I put it aside for a time when I would be feeling better. Sn it wasn't until recently, when I was free of mind and reasonably free of pain, that I opened "Life oo the Run" and was pleasantly surprised with Bill's easy style of relating the life of a pro-fessional basketball player.

Bradley's style of writing is pretty much his style of play, except that it lacks the intensity of his performance

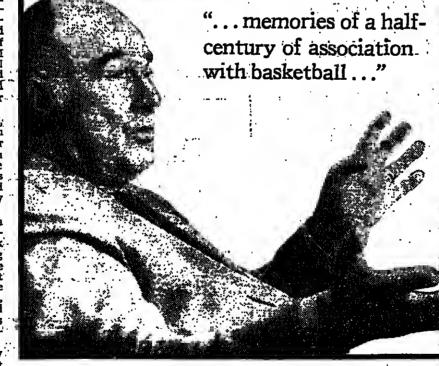

At times, he even shows a sense of humor-which may surprise many Bradley fana who rarely see him smile on the court. He bas written an outstanding book, one that should be read by all basketball fans, even those who think they know all there is to know about the game.

Memories of Growing Up

As I read those parts of the book pertaining to officiating, the abilities of other players, psychological aspects of the game, etc., it brought back a flood of memories of a half-century of association with basketball when it was growing and trying to gain acceptance as a true major league professional

For example, Bill comments about playing to the "old" Madison Square Garden when exuberant faos sometimes would touch the cables connecting the basket to the floor, thus causing the basket to sway as an opposing player attempted to foul shot. This started me thinking of the days when the Syracuse Nationals were in the N.B.A. The cables attached to the baskets in Syracuse were surrounded by Syracuse fans, among the most cotbusiastic, disorderly and loyal in the history of the game.

In the waning seconds of a close game, it was virtually impossible for an opposing player to shoot a foul. The basket moved laterally back and forth so much that the officials would have to stop the game in an attempt to bring some semblance of order. It usually took fiva to 10 minutes to complete the last five seconds of a game, particularly if Syracuse was abead and successful foul shots by the opposition would be a factor in winning the game. I remember a particular contest refereed by John Nucatola, now the supervisor of officials of the N.B.A., in which Sweetwater Clifton of the Knicks was attempting to shoot a foul in the last few seconds of the game. The basket was moving back and forth like a swing in a children's playground and nothing that the officials attempted to do could correct the situation. Finally, Nucatola, in desperation, directed Clifton to attempt to shoot the foul and told him that if he missed he would award him the point anyway because of crowd action. Elifton, surprised, took aim and successfully dropped the ball into the basket, even though it was about 10 feet from where it should

Silenca in the Cab

Bradley touches on the psychological aspect of playing the gama and does so in a magnificent manner, as one would expect of a Rhodes Scholar. That phase of the book reminded me of my first exposure to the real importance of being "phyched" for a game. It was in the early days of my commissionership and I was standing in front of a hotel in Cincinnati waiting for a cab to take me to the Cincinnati Gardens for a game between the Boston Celtics and the Royals.

It was a cold, blustery winter night and cabs were scarce, Arnold Auerbach, Sam Jones, Casey Jones and Don Nelson joined me and subsequently we all took the same cab to the arena. I started several discussions about various subject matters but received little response from the players in the cab. theorized that they may have been ill at ease sharing a cab with the commissioner and as I walked into the arena with Auerbach, I asked him why the players seemed so quiet during the long ride out.

Arnold, never one to mince words, said, "Those guys were psyching themselves up for the game and you were breaking their concentration. Don't you know that no basketball player worth his salt has his mind on anything except the game for an hour or two before it is played?"

That very incident explains some of the success of Auerbach as a coach and the Celtics as a team. Bradley credits Auerbach with helping him improve his game when he was in college and described him as a "great teacher" who understands how to motivate players."

Although Bradley's book is primarily a recital of the personalities, idiosyncrasies and everyday living of his teamates on the Knicks, he does comment from time to time no other players. He says, for example, "I guard John Havlicek-by far the most difficult job I have in a season. Havlicek's every movement has a purpose and his team-mates look for him constantly." Once asked, "Who is the toughest guy for you to guard?" Bradley quickly answered, "Havlicek." Because I was associated with tha

N.B.A. for so many years, starting in 1946 as its publicity director when it first started and finishing in 1975 after 12 years as commissioner. I am often asked who is the best player in the history of the N.B.A. I have constantly dodged the question because there are so many great basketball players who have appeared in the league over the years.

A Solid Vote for Havlicek

Reading Bradley's comments on Havlicek, and with a lot of time to think without outside distractions, I began to consider seriously just who was the best player in the N.B.A. during its 30 years of existence, 19 seasons of which I was involved in some capacity with the league. In my opinion, pound for pound, and particularly considering what he did for the motivation of the Boston Celtics over the years, I think John Havlicek probably was the N.B.A.'s best all-around player. His performance under almost incredibly painful conditions in the 1976 playoffs against Phoenix clinched my thinking.

From time to time Bill comments about the horrendous playing conditions of some of the arenas. He should have played in the N.B.A. back in the days when teams like Waterloo, Iowa, and Sheboygan, Wis., were in the league. I think it was in the latter city that games were played in a large high school gym that supplied its heat with two huge fars located at the end of the wall just a few feet behind each basket. The pressure of hot air created by each of the fans was manually controlled.

In a close game, if the home team was ahead, it was virtually impossible for the visiting team to score a basket in the closing seconds because tha volume of hot air coming out of the fan vent was so increased that it would blow the ball away from the basket after it left the shooter's hand. It was not a rarity to see a foul shot literally bounce up and down in the air en route to the basket as the intensity of the hot-air emission kept It from going into the basket.

This will probably be Bill Bradley's last year in the N.B.A. I think he is one of the most underrated players in the game. Always moving, unsmiling, play ing with deep intensity, he provided a "glue" for the Knicks in their great years and has kept them from looking worse than they should have in their off-years."

· 1 will be sorry to see Bill Bradley retire from the Knicks. His constant movement, shooting off picks, run-runrun style of play and his purpose and intensity have been an integral part of the Knicks' success and he has been an outstanding representative of professional basketball. In addition to the pleasant memories be will leave when he retires, he will also leave "Life on the Run"-a book for all seasons that sums up extremely well what a professional basketball player's life is

To the Sports Editor: :

I know it's as American as—well, pizza—but is it really necessary, every year, to be regaled with the hilarious sight of a victorious outfielder pouring Mcet or Mumm over the bead of a victorious infielder? a gymoasium in an old section of Baltia gynoastum in an old section of batte-more "from an old girl's school that had folded." They converted the gym into a squash facility, which has been run ever since as a nonprofit club.

"My husband started playing all the time, and I said, 'l'il be damned if I'll be a squash widow, so I went down and learned to play," Mrs. Riehl cx-plained.

An Important Year

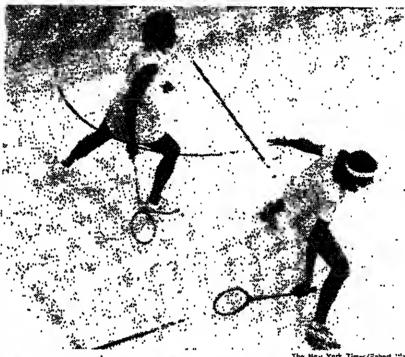

Mrs. Riehl's Interest (and proficieocy) developed, and she now heads an or-ganization that boasts 800 members and is growing steadily. A $5 annual membership fee entitles women enthusiasts to periodic newsletters and an official yearbook of the United States Squash Racquets Association.

"A survey is now in progress, but we estimate that there are between 20,000 and 25,000 women squash racquets players in the country at this time. And that represents about a 400 percent increase over the last three years," Mrs. Riehl said.

This year has been important for women's squasb racquets. Bancroft 5porting Goods, a subsidiary of Colgate, has lent its support to the women's association and last week announced the establishment of the first . tournament offering prize mooey for women in this country. It will take place Jan. 21-23 at the Uptown Racquet Club on East 86th Street.

Mrs. Riehl is, of course, very eothusiastic about the growth of women's squash as a recognized sport, but also stresses the value of the game io maintaining physical fitness.

"I had a kidney removed because of a malignant tumor, and was on the aquash court six weeks later," she said.

Rise in N.F.L. Penalties Disturbing and Puzzling

By LEONARD KOPPETT

What about the "penalty explosion" in the National Football League, remarked upon over the last four weeks age would wind up at a 25-year high, Last year the average was 52 yards by coaches, players and spectators; is It's real, all right. For the first three weeks of this season, peoalty yardage for the league as pecalized per team per game. It was somewhat lower tha three preceding years, and somewhat higher the three years before that, but the fluctuation has been between a high of 59.9 yards in 1970 (the first season of the merged league) to a low of 47 in 1974. Reach a High Plateau

During the first three weeks of play this year, the averages were 52.3, S3.0 and S5.5. But on the weekend of Oct. 3, the average jumped to 70.3. The three weeks since have been 62.8, 67.9 and 60.45.

Since such figures cover 14 games each weekend, involving all teams, questions of playing style or breaks of the game cancel out

But since football is a game in which every move is rehearsed for many hours, with a larger ratio of practiceto gametime than any other team sport, it is also hard to believe that all of a sudden, in the middle of a achedule, lots of players started playing in a different way.

The Chicago Bears, for instance, were penalized 65 yards in their first game, 13 io their second and 30 io their third. lo the oext three, they drew 147, 90 and 98. The Baltimore Colts were penalized 120 yards altogether in their first three games and 230 io the oext three. In similar fashion, San Diego's total jumped from 129 to 213, and Seattle's from 80 to 273.

The Fluctutations Are Wild

Not all teams bave bad such sudden increases, of course, but the fluctuations bave been remarkable. Denver was penalized 10 yards one week and 132 the next; the St. Louis Cardinals bad 139 yards one week and 15 the oext. In the first 42 games played, there were nine instances of a team being penalized 90 yards or more; in the next 42 games, there were 18.

Such across - the - board variations cao't be ascribed to a particular set of coaches, teams or players. They re-flect a change in officiatiog policy. A few weeks ago, the league office in-structed its officials to "call it closer." Such instructions, in midseason of a game built on habit-drilled techniques, make an important change io the nature of play.

Also penalty statistics by themselves understate the effect on the game, because they do oot show penalties declined or the yards lost on the nullified

Those Million-Dollar Babies

Because there isn't enough room in Tiffany's or Cartier's or Harry Win-ston's, baseball's first mass venture into the precious gem market will take place this week in the Plaza's genteele precincts. The so-called "re-entry draft," which means an auction of freed slaves, will be con-ducted there on Thursday, and it is conceivable that the American electorate will take almost as lively an interest in this historic event as in the decisions made (wo days earlier. If a single

World Series game can capture more than 75 million watchers, which is just a shade under the total popular vote in the last Presidential election, then more than several citizens will pay attention when players like Joe Rudi, Bobby Grich and Don Gullett place their rose-and-ivory carcasses

Unless private agreements have been reached uoder the table, no deals for this warm merchandise will be consummated on Thursday. The draft is a preliminary auction in which the 24 clubs now in the majors -not counting those embryos in Seattle and Toronto—divide among themselves the right to negotiate with players who worked out their options in the season just completed and became free agents. It is unprecedented in three important respects. Whereas all previous drafts of free agents dealt with untried talent fresh out of high school or college or off the sandlots, this bazaar offers only established professionals, including some of the most expensive live-stock this side of Secretariat's off-spring. Instead of one club getting the exclusive right to hire a player, as many as 12 clubs may claim the privilege of making bim an offer. Finally, this is the first time the serfs have been free to put themselves on the market and pocket the proceeds.

Something like 25 players are in this category but the oumber could change. All free agents have uotil midnight tonight to accept terms with the clubs that owoed them last seasoo and there is still time for other players to break loose, as Oak-land's Nate Colbert did the other day.

Charlie's Legions

Wheo club representatives meet Thursday morning, the names of the free agents will be posted. Starting with the Montreal Expos, who fin-ished at the bottom of the National League, teams will make selections in loverse order of their standing, with the Yankees coming last. Suppose the Expos named Reggle Jack-soo and the White Sox also chose Jackson and the Braves picked Doyle Alexander. It would go on like that until Jacksoo, say, had been selected by 12 clubs. His name would be scrubbed from the list and the draft would proceed as loog as any club was interested in any player still in the pool.

After the draft. dicker with all the clubs that selected him, plus his old team. A club mav claim the right to negotiate with as many players as it wishes but it may sign no more than two uoless it lost more than two as free agents. In that event it may hire as many as it lost. If a club could put io a claim for every player in the pool before he had been named 12 times, that would be permissible.

Bob Howsam of the Cincinnati Reds has said the champions would take no part in the draft. Charlie Finley will take part, but if all his unsigned belots stay unsigned. Oakland would be entitled to replace eight-Rudi, Bert Campaneris, Sal

Terms agreed on last July provide tbat any player signing a 1976 contract after Aug. 8 would be governed by the "new form" of contract, mean-ing he would have to play in the majors six years before he could become a free agent, Colbert, who signed after Aug. 9, already had his six years in. Within the limit of 15 days after the World Series, he filed notice that he wanted free agency. He got it the other day.

Loves and Hates of Vida

Finley's $10 million damage suit against Bowie Kuhn opeos in Federal Court in Chicago soon after the draft. The owner of the A's sued when the baseball commissioner vetoed all sales of Rudi and Fiogers to Bostoo for $1 millioo each and Vida Blue to the Yankees for $1.5 millioo, If the court rules that Kuhn exceeded his authority, chances are it can only assess damages. It could bardly rule that the players were the property of the Red Sox and Yankees, for even If the deals had gone through, Rudi and Fingers would be free agents now unless they had elected to sign

Blue had signed a three-year contract with the A's shortly before the abortive sale. Inasmuch as he had publicly, caodidly and emphatically hated Finley's guts for years, it was assumed that he had signed only to facilitate his transfer to the Yaokees. In those circumstances, It seemed unfair and unfeeling for Kuhn to turn him back into Finley's clutches for three more years. It turns out now that Vida loves those clutches. He had done a complete turnabout and decided Oakland was where he waoted to be, and had signed on the promise that he would not be sold or traded. When his sale to the Yankees was announced, he was furious at Finley for lying to him, but he still obeyed Kuhn's order

If Vida's love-hate relationship with Charlie seems confusing, well, these are divice passions that the poets have tried for centuries to dissect and catalogue. If the puzzle stumped Edgar A. Guest, doo't look for solu-

This group, formed as a policy-producing body for the campaign of Jimmy Carter, recommended early last week the revocation of the U. 5. O. C.'s Federal charter, creation of a new Olympic organization and an autonomous Federal agency to control all amateur and professional sports in the

The new attitude on the part of the U. S. O. C. involves more than response to the threat of governmental intervention or aggressive leadership on the part of Col. Don Miller, the executive director.

From a historical point of view, the U.S.O.C. never assumed responsibility for the development of amateur ath-letics in the United States. The philosophy of the late Avery Brundage a long-time president of the organiza-tion, was oriented toward team pre-paration. In Brundage's view, the com-mittee should remain above such tasks as reimbursing athletes for lost time or soliciting contributions and commitments from corporations.

Miller has changed these priorities. By oext year, hundreds of large American corporations may be involved in financiog programs for Moscow or finding jobs for individual athletes.

Athletes Given a Voice Miller also has given the greeo light to the first intensive study of the scientific and medical aspects of sports and their effect on the performance of Olympic athletes. Dr. Irving Dardik of Tenafly, N. J., has begun organizing the U. S. O. C. medical team that will explore areas from anabolic steroids to blood doping.

Administratively, the U. S. O. C. has revamped many of its committees and given athletes their first voice in policy decisions. Robert Kane, the first vice president, who is io line for the presidency during the next four years, is considered one of the committee's more progressive administrators. Some skeptics believe that the committee has not acted quickly enough and that, like Humpty Dumpty, all of the committee's financial horses and manpower, cannot put America's Olympic effort together without starting from scratch, under a new body. Others contend it is not too late, but that only dramatic programs in the area of development can keep the United States on a competitive level with the Soviet Union and East Ger-U. S. O. C. officials are keeping a low profile at the moment. But unlike four years ago, when they went into hiding out of embarrassment, their current mood is quiet optimism: finally, we are on the right track, thye are saying, and when we do something, we will do it right this time.

On that basis, the committee hopes to counter criticism with concrete pro-grams. In this framework, Humpty Dumpty is back on top-stroog but not fat.

pass when you can run so well? The Jets, though, haven't dooe much in pre-venting quarterbacks from moving against them.

So this will be the setting for Todd, a rookie, who is the man the Jets specifically selected in the college draft to replace Joe Namath. Todd is playing because of Namath's sore right knee, and gets an honor of starting as quarterback on a team in which only three others have begun a game since Namath's pro career started in 1965.

Marangi also was a back-up until Joe Ferguson's lower-back injury last week against New England sidelined him for the year. Marangi is a third-year pro. He did well in the Bills' loss to the Jets, though. The Bills had entered that game with Ferguson leading the American Conference in passing. But Ferguson was benched with only 64 yards on eight completions in 18 attempts.

Marangi played the second half, leading the Bills to a pair of touchdowns. Since then, Marangi haso't had much success. He was three of six against the Jets. Against everyone else, though, he has completed only eight of 30.

Ferguson's Two Records

Ferguson didn't know it, but when he was sidelined, he qualified for two National Football League records. It takes 150 passes to qualify, and Fergu-son had thrown 151 times. He now holds the record for fewest intercep-tions in a season (1) and lowest percentage of interceptions (0.7).

The Jets will have someone besides Marangi to think about—his name is O.J. Simpson. Yet, they handled Simpson well in their last meeting. They handled him so well, in fact, that Simpson did not see the ball for most of the second half. His 15 rushing at-tempts could gain only 53 yards. His longest gain was only 11 yards.

Todd probably will play all the way. The Jets are very careful to repeat that this is not just a trial for Todd, that if he does well he will start against Miami io Shea Stadium next Sunday. "Joe Namath is our quarterback if he can play." Lou Holtz has been say-ing since he became coach. However, there is another factor that Holtz may finally admit: The Jets are unlikely to make the playoffs this season.

Since Namath himself has wondered why the Jets want him "when they're building for the future, and I'm not part of their future plans," would it hurt to have Todd start the remaining

That is a question Holtz is uncomfortable with. For without actually saving anything negative, he leaves the imoression that he believes Tood cannot sten in right now and do the major league job that Namath can.

Holtz speaks admiringly of Namath's ability to read the defenses. He talks often of Namath's "super attitude." and of how the "young players look up to Joe. who's our offensive captain.

That's hardly the case these days. About the only sure thing at any of the nations's nearly 10,000 bowling establishments is that the foul line and pins are separated by a distance of 60 feet, depending on whether you hit the headpin or, regrettably, one of the sticks in ooe of the back rows.

Today's lane surfaces are coosidera harder than they were in yesteryear and, without getting too complex, the reason is a relaxing of the rule that at one time made it mandatory that proprietors resurface their lanes quite often. With costs having become probibitive, frequent resurfacing has been circumvented and one of the methods oow used to protect the wood from the coostant friction of a rolling bnwling ball is to apply heavier coats protective lacquers. Which brings us, by a circuitous route, to today's

John McVay's Big Opportunity

Of their other remaining games, the Giants probably will be favored nver the Seattle Seahawks and the Detroit Lions, but they will be underdogs to the Dallas Cowboys, St. Louis Cardinals, Washington Redskins and Denver Broncos. On that basis, John McVay's quota is three victories. More would be a bonus. Fewer would be a disappointment. His future will depend partly on his record. If the Giants win four or more games, be's probably sure tn return. If they win three, he might return. If they win two or one, it's unlikely he'll return. If the Giants go 0-14, the franchise may not return.

An Unusual Winner

Even if the Giants do win three or four games, John McVay could be upstaged by a glamour name who's available — Parseghian or Paterno or Majors or possibly George Allen if the Redskins don't make the playoffs again and he's at liberty. George Allen does not seem to be Wellington Mara's type hut with 76,000 seats in the new Giants Stadium, the owner might be desperate enough to hire him. Everywhere he's been, football people speak of John McVay with respect and fondness, both as a coach and as a person. With the Memphis Southmen in the World Football League, his won-lost record nver two seasons was 23-7 and when he took over as Dayton University's head coach in 1966, the Flyers' record was

"Flagship of the N.F.L."

"He turned our program around," says Don Donaher, the Dayton athletic director. "The football team was 1-8-1 the year before, scoring only 26 points. In his third season here, John's team scored 222 points."

But when Dayton began decreasing its football grants-in-aid, the victo-ries also decreased. McVay became Dayton's athletic director until John Bassett, the Toronto millionaire who owned the Memphis team in the W.F.L., hired him on the advice of Leo Cahili, the Southmen's general

"John is unusual for a winning coach," Bassett says. "He's the absolute opposite of an egomaniac. I can't ever remember him asking if I could get him a TV show, or how many cars the coaching staff had, or what was his bonus if we won the champlonship. He's a terrific person.'

John McVay has a reputation as a calm coach. But at Dayton he's remembered for punching a hlackboard after a tough loss.

"That loss cost us the Pasadena Bowl," he remembers. "we were in. All we had to do was win our last game. And we lost."

But mostly, John McVay is calm and content. In Memphis he lived in a lakefront cottage where he enjoyed water skitng and grilling steaks for his friends. But now he's living in an apartment in Jefferson Valley, N.Y., not far from the Giants' practice complex.

"It's the first time," 45-year-old John McVay says, "Tve ever lived in an apartment."

He sounded as if he wanted to live in a lakefront cottage next year-as "Football should be fun," says McVay. "I've got to be careful how I say this, but it's better than work. To me, coaching is fun. I love the game. Game Day is fun."

There has been a noticeable easing of tensions since Arnsparger's dismiss-al last Monday. McVay, in his low-key approach, has been huilding enthusiasm toward today's National Football League contest at 1 P.M. at Giaots

"Game Day: To me, that's the high point of our week." said McVay. "That's the time we put on our silks." This is the Giants' "second season," Half the schedule remains, and, though WCBS-TV has given up oo the Giants (preferring to televise the Dallas Cow-boy-Washington Redskin game instead), McVay hasn't. "We've got seven ball games left, and this football team is looking forward to seveo ball games," he said. "It's the excitement of the business. Every week there's another challenge."

This week's challenger upset the Giants, 20-7, at Philadelphia in the second game of the season. But the Giants, still without a victory, are still favored over the Eagles, whose only other victory has been at the expense of the Atlanta Falcons, 14-13.

"When you're 0-7 and you're playing a team that's 2-5," said Coach Dick Vermeil of the Eagles, "and when you've heen playing a lot of top-notch teams, you should be excited about playing a team with your capability."

In retrospect, it seems a team from P.S. 4 would have been capable of beating the Gianto on Sept. 19. The Giants had lost their opener and their spirit to the Redskins, 19-17, and were "flat" against the Eagles, said Philadelphia's star middle linebacker, Bill Bergey.

The Giants then lost five straight games to teams that reached the play-offs last year. Now they are back in their own league, where their progress, if any, can be better judged. The offensive linemen could not protect the quarterback against contenders, and if they can't do hetter against the Eagles, then, as Rohustelli said, they'll have

In the first meeting, the Eagles were able to run against the middle of the Giants' line, and Mike Boryla, the young quarterback, threw in some passes for halance. But the Giants' middle defense has changed since then. Menhenhall is at left tackle, and two rookies, Troy Archer, at right tackle, and Harry Carson, at middle lineback-er, are part of what Arnsparger used to call the "nucleus" of future winning Giant teams.

Archer and Carson were Arnsparger's prize draft picks last April. A third draft selection, Gordon Bell, might get some more work at halfback today. On the sideline, with a clipboard, will be perhaps another key member of Arnsparger's nucleus, Jerry Golsteyn, the rookie quarterback who was injured 10 days before the start of the season and who still has the confidence of the Giants' front office.

All around are young men who Arnsparger kept calling football

SHOES FOR MEN THE SHOE THAT ATS YOUR POO cmartin

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

WEST POINT, N.Y., Oct. 30-Footballs do take funny bounces although Col. Earl Blaik, who coached the Army football teams for 18 glorious seasons in the 1940's and 1950's liked to say that luck was the residue of design-

Ben Martin, coach of the Air Force Academy, would have been hard pressed to agree today as his Falcons lost to Army, 24-7, in a game that saw the bounces go against the air cadets.

Constant bickering between the officials and Martin and his assistants marked the play in the second half, in which Air Force was the better team on the field but not on the scoreboard. When the game ended, Leland Kendall, the Falcons' defensive coach, stormed on the field to take on the referee, Donald Dwyer, but calmer heads prevailed and no blows were struck.

Penalties Hurt Falcons

Behind 14-0 at halftime, the Air Force team scored in the third quarter, came close twice more and outgained the Army 217 to 94 in the last two periods. But the Falcons were penalized five times, all big ones—pass inter-ference twice, personal foul twice and clipping once—penalties that came at the most inopportune times. Total penalties were 10 against Air Force for 101 yards, two against Army for 10.

In addition, a possible touchdown pass in the end zone was oot allowed because the receiver, Paul Williams, was ruled as outside the scoring area, hy inches.

The Air Force, which had beaten Navy but lost five of its other six games, committed other sins, including six fumbles, two of which were lost, and one vital pass interception. One fumble, of a kickoff after Army's first touchdown in the second quarter, was lost at the Falcon 9 and quickly led to the Cadets' second score. The Air Force started a freshman quarterback, Dave Ziebart who de-served grades of A for effort and persistance. Harassed by charging Army linemen, Ziebart tried one pass he would like to forget forever. It went 5 yards, right into the midsection of an Army defensive end, Hal Burton, and the interception gave Mike Castelli, the kicker, a chance to boot a 34-yard field goal in the fourth quarter,

Those 3 points gave Army a solid 17-7 lead and took away any chance of victory for the Falcons, who out-gained their opponents, 332 yards to 217. The last Army touchdown came on a 33-yard run by Greg King, the halfback, with 2½ minutes left to play as the Black Knights evened their season's record, four victories and four

Score Follows Fumble

King had an earlier touchdown from the one in the first quarter after the Air Force fumble, by Shelby Ball, of the kickoff. Sixty-six seconds earlier, Clennie Brundige, Army's tight end and leading receiver who played al-though his hrother had died yesterday, had made a fine catch in the end zone of an 18-yard pass from Leatnon Hill, Army's quarterback, forthe first touch-

Hall, who had been the heart of the Army attack all season, was not a dominant figure today. The Air Force defense, led by the ends (Dave Scott and Linwood Mason) and especially hy a linebacker Jack Kucera), effectively chased Hall all afternoon. The lanky Army passer was dropped six times for Sacks and completed only six pass attempts of 14, for 59 yards. All six came in the first half when Army was

Jim Kuhacki the Harvard quarterback, completed a 70-yard pass play to Tom Winn for the late score that gave the 26,500 fans season to hope for one of Harvard's last-secood rescues. But it was not to be this time.

It was known before the game that Coach Joe Restic was going to have his Harvard team use oearly every-thing possible on offense, working from the "multiflex" system, which is known for tricky and unusual formations. But oo one expected Restic to go as far as calling up the old single wing and double wing formations.

Harvard theo worked the single wing for 17 yards gained in two plays after taking its lead. Mistakes in ball-handling during three more single-wing plays forced Harvard to put that attack back with the moth balls.

Kubacki scored from the 1-yard line oo a quarterback sneak io the first two minutes of the second period Lynch kicked the extra point, and Harvard led, 7-0.

Brown Uses the Basics

Brown, however, came out with basic and typical 1976-style football. It worked to perfection when the Bruins took the second half kick-off and drove 67. yards for their touchdown.

Paul Milchalko, the Brown quarterback, hit Bob Farnham on a 10-yard scoring pass for the touchdown. Farnham was completely alone in the end zone on the play as Harvard's linehackers and secondary became confused in a switch fust before the snap.

Rich Riddle missed the extra point for the Burins, ao Harvard still beld the lead. 7-6.

But four minutes later, Brown called upon Chaps, a sophomore from Detroit, to try a fietid goal from the Harvard 35. Few expected success, but it was fourth and 12, so Brown had nothing to lose. Kick Just Makes It

The ball sailed high and just dropped over the cross har. Chapa bad heen suffering from a pulled right or kicking leg muscle receotly.

With this 9-7 lead, Brown really improved in bitting and beating Harvard away for the ball on most every play. This was the key when Tom Thurow punted for Brown in the fourth quarter and Neil Jacohs, a linehacker on the kicking team, got down field fast enough to down the hall on the Crimson 3 just hefore it would have taken its last bounce into the end zone.

Two plays later, Kubacki rolled left and kept, hut he was hit hard and lost the ball. Brown's Luke Gaffney, a defensive back, fell on it at the Harvard 3. Now the Brown team and fans really smelled Ivy championship.

Coach John Anderson, the man who has built this Brown squad, sent io a little-used running back, John King, Zoubek's second 3-pointer, midway through the third quarter, did not turn out to be enough. Penn, with Graustein completiog 22 of 35 passes for 275 yards repeatedly was on the move, only to be thwarted by turnovers. Many in the crowd of 10,500 had already left as Princetoo failed to make a one-foot gain for a first down on the Penn 36. Only 1 minute 46 secoods remained. The Quakers then took possession and staged one of the hest finishes in the stadium's 62-year history.

The sophomore from King of Prussia, Penn., plunged right through the middle on the first down for the touchdown that proved the deciding factor in this most important game for Brown in

ATHENS, Ga., Oct. 30 (UPI)—Ray Goff scored two touchdowns and helped set up two others today in sparking Georgia to a rain-plagued 31-17 victory over Cincinnati. Norfolk State Wins Memorial Game

By AL HARVIN

Norfolk State and Bethune-Cookman, neither of which had the football repu-tation of Grambling or Morgan State although both had better records this year, drew a sparse crowd to Yankee Stadium for the sixth anoual Whitney M. Young Jr. Memorial Classic yesterday. Norfolk State won, 23-14, rallying in the final period Bethune-Cookman, a small, private predominantly black school from Daytona Beach, Fla., and Norfolk State from Virginia also predominantly hlack, were the defending champions of their respective conferences, the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic and the Central Intercollegiata Athletic. The Wildcats from Daytona Beach had a 6-1 won-lost record before the game time. Their first-year coach, Andy Hinsoo from Camden, N.J., was boping to equal last year's 10-1 mark with most of the offense and defense

Norfolk State, conference champion two straight years under Coach Dick Price, had a 5-2 record.

Big Parade in Harlem

The game was preceded by a blg parade up Harlem's Adam Claytoo Powell Jr. Boulevard and a concert in the Stadium featuring Harold Melvin and the Bluenotes. Several dozen parties also preceded the game and were scheduled to follow it into the wee hours of Sunday morning.

Two Bethune - Cookman fumbles helped set up a Norfolk State touch-down and field goal in the first period and gave State a 9-7 halftime lead Behune-Cookman lost four of five fumbles. The first costly fumble was by

Charlie White, a senior from Spring Valley, N.Y. It was recovered by Tony Harris, junior linebacker, on the State 48-yard line. Three plays later Steve Graeff, Norfolk's white quarterback, hit the 6-foot-7-inch tight end, Ronnie McCoy, with a 46-yard scoring pass. The snap on the poiot-after kick attempt was fumbled, leaving the score 6-0.

State got another chance to score immediately afterward. Jim Flowers' kickóff was fumbled by Charlie Cor-nelius, giving State the ball oo the Bethune-Cookman 18. A pass-Interference penalty put it on the 1 with first down. But the Bethune-Cookman defense held. Graeff fumbled a handoff on fourth down, and the hall was re-covered by Elliot Thompson. That was one of two fumbles lost by Norfolk State before intermission.

Flowers Boots Field Goal

However, Reggle Beverly, Bethune's junior quarterback, fumbled on the first play from scrimmage oo the next ser-les and Jim Doughtic, linebacker, recovered on the B.C. 28. After driving to the 1, State settled for an 18-yard goals by Flowers with one second gone in the second period. Bethune-Cookman finally got its of-fense going near the midway mark of the second period. It mounted a 76-vard touchdown drive, highlighted by White's 48-yard run on a pitchout. White plunged over from the 1. Rodney Henry's point-after kick was good.

The drive by the Wildcats gave them 128 yards on offense for the first half, but their passing game netted no gain, All three of their passes were incomplete, while, Graeff completed four of nine for 90 yards and had one

White, who had missed three games this season with a dislocated elbow, had 86 yards rushing on 11 carries in the half, a 7.8 average. His total rose to 107 yards on 16 carries at the end of the third period.

Bethune-Cookman took a 14-9 lead in the third period, when Beverly completed his first pass. It was a 5-yarder in the right flat to the 6-4 tight end, Andre Samuels, who outran the secondary in a 60-yard dash for the touchdown.

But Norfolk took the lead again, 16-14, with 13:12 left in the game, marching 80 yards in 13 plays for a touchdown. It was capped by a 29-yard scoring pass from Graeff to Eddle Powell, a flanker from Portsmouth, Va.

secood touchdown burst. Normally a wing back. low-key despite his explosive running style, Dorsett waved the hall in the air with his right hand, in a gesture of contempt for a Syracuse defensive hack, as he reached the Orange 8-yard line en route to the goal. Until last Saturday, when he passed for 193 yards against Temple and was voted Eastern Collegiate back of the week, the 6-foot, 188-pound Hurley had completed only 7 of 32 passes. But considering his status as a converted tailback, time was in his favor.

Hurley puzzled the Panthers with 7 of 14 completions for 180 yards in the first half and added 40 vards on 13 option keepers and quarterback draws, all of which kept the Pitt defense, par ticularly the secondary, tentative and guessing.

Syracuse showed its intentions on the first offensive series, marching 71 yards to the Pitt 8-yard line. But the Orange lost possession oo a fumble, one of two fumbles inside the Panther 10-yard line io the first half.

Syracuse threw a wide 5-man defensive front at Pitt in an effort to force the Panthers' running game inside. To inhibit Dorsett's effectiveness on sweeps, the Orange defensive backs aggressively fired in from wide angles of the field. By the eod of the first quarter, Dorsett was minus 5 yards rushing and nursing his injury, and Syracuse was ahead 7-3, on a school-record 80-yard an injury, was reflected in Dorsett's pass play from Hurley to Doo Megee, Dorstt sat oot ooly one series before returning early in the second period. His presence quickly perked up the Panthers, who moved 95 yards in 14 plays for a touchdown and a 10-7 lead. Dorsett dove he last yard over the middle with 7:25 left in the half.

Syracuse refused to roll over even after Dorsett set his collegiate record with a 15-yard run on the third play of the third quarter. Successive field goals of 45 and 55 yards by David Jacobs, a 5-foot-7-inch sophomore soccer stylist from Philadelphia, moved the Orange in front 13-10, with 8:48 left in the quarter.

EAST LANSING, Mich., Oct. 30 (UPI) -Eddie Smith's two touchdown passes in a wild third quarter today set a Michigan State season completion record and lifted the Spartans to a 45-13 Big Ten victory over Purdue. Smith now has 94 completions this year, three more htan the mark set by Mark Rasmussen in 1970. Emerging from a 13-10 halftime deficit, Smith completed a 35-yard pass to Eugune Byrd on the third play of the second half and hit Byrd again two plays later on a 24-yard scoring pass. Smith later engineered a 61-yard drive that ended with a 4-yard scoring pass to Levi Jackson.

A Shadow Hovers Over the Maryland Campus: The Untimely Deaths of Two Basketball Players

By TONY KORNHEISER Special to The New York Times

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—In the room where the Maryland basketball players eat, Steve Sheppard sits at the head the table cutting his steak and cheese. His teammates, who sit at the sides of the table, call him, "Bear," because of his strength. He is their cap-tain, the heart and soul of their team.

He wears his soul on his sleeve. It's his heart that has people edgy. "Don't ask me about my heart," Sheppard says, smiling theatrically as he issues the command. "I don't wanna talk about it. The doctors say there's nothing wrong with me-you got that?" Twice in the last three years, Sheppard's heartbeat has been recorded as irregular under a stress test that the university gives some of its athletes. Both times, more extensive and sophis-ticated tests have found no structural damage in Sheppard's heart, and he has been allowed to continue playing. Indeed, he was a member of the United States Olympic basketball team that won the gold medal at Montreal, and be has been named to many preseason all-America teams.

At another school an irregular heartbeat, even an all-American's, would not be the object of such concern; according to cardiologists, some incident of irregular heart beat is common to most

But this is not another school-this is Maryland.

Earlier this year two Maryland basketball players collapsed in separate pickup games, and died of beart-related

In February, Owen Brown, a 1975 graduate and former starter, died in Leeshurg, Va., from a rare congenital beart lesion called subaortic steoosis. In 1974, Brown had shown an irregular heartbeat under the stress test, but further testing failed to disclose the se-verity of his coodition, and be was allowed to continue playing basketball.

Jim Kehoe

In April, Chris Patton, a sophomore and occasional starter, died oo campus from ao aortic aneurysm. Later, be was said to be suffering from Marfan's Syndrome, a rare genetic disease that weot undiagnosed because he exhibited only one symptom, taliness.

Neither death was preventable or treatable according to Dr. Gabe Mirkin, who wrote about both for The Washington Post. After investigations by the university and local newspapers, it was coocluded that the school and its athletic department were in no way sponsible for the deaths; no link between the deaths was found, no lawsuits filed.

"It did not occur to me that we needed to panic at all," said Dr. Wilson Elkins, the university president who lettered in football and basketball while an undergraduate at Texas. "I think there might have been a story or two in the campus newspaper. 'Diamondback,' about the need to re-evaluate our athletic program; I personally paid no attention to it."

'An Unfortunate Coincidence'

Elkins's conclusion was that the deaths were, "an unfortunate coincidence." Unfortunate, straoge and somewhat frightening.
"One death you can shrug off," said

Vince Paterno, Diamondhack co-sports editor, "Two, you start thinkingsomething seems kind of strange."

The athletic department's immediate response was to redouble its effort to give the best possible medical care to its athletes. Jim Kehoe, the athletic director, and Lefty Driesell, the basketball coach, now hoast of the school's medical care as if it were the finest in the nation on a university level.

The irony is that the extensive testing program—which again disclosed Sheppard's irregular beartbeat—is responsible for renewing attention on the Mary-land basketball program.

As all bad news does, it comes at a bad time.

Maryland had all but outrun last spring's wave of skeptical publicity. Its football team is undefeated and generating reams of favorable copy; its students had the summer break as a time to forget. And the campus, with its Jeffersonian magnificeoce, never wore the pallor of death easily. It seemed that it was all behind us," said Steve Schanwald, the roommate of a basketball player, Brian Magid. "But then the thing about Sheppard really shook me up."

Like the opening of an old wound. It hurts now, and it recalls how it hurt

He'd Like to Forget It

"The doctors say he's fine, Steve's fine," Driesell said recently to someooe interested in the unfortunate coincidence. Driesell was somewhat annoyed with the questioning. His Southern accent thickened, his tone sharpened, and he said, "I don't understand what you're doing—just bringing up something I'd rather get over with. I try not to dwell oo it; there's nothing I can do about it. And I don't want it to affect the people who are on this team now." The deaths of Brown and Patton, the irregular heartbeat of Sheppard are subjects that are rarely discussed, except perhaps behind closed doors. Publicly, the players say the team is unaffected by the incidents; they use learned philosophy-"what happened, happened; you have to look to the future." It is a carefully cultivated party

I'm strong I'm ready. And I'm fine,' said Sheppard, who played his high school ball at DeWitt Clinton in the Bronx. "You tell the people back home that I'm the best forward in the country. Tell 'em to huy their tickets and come see The Steve Sheppard Show. People'll eat that stuff up in the city." Hear no evil. See no evil. Speak no

Privately, some people close to Shep-pard say that he is "a basket case." That all the publicity about his heart and the specter of two dead teammates have forced this unnatural facade of showmanship. They say that the senior is scared about his condition, and may push himself beyond his capacity to prove to everyone that he is healthy; certainly, any sign of weakness would burt his chances for a windfall professional contract.

"I just wish people would stop asking me about my heart," Sheppard said."I can't concentrate on playing ball if people keep asking about it. People keep on asking about it, and I start believing there's something wrong with me."

But what bappens, someone asked, when you get a chest pain?

"Come on, man," came a voice from a side seat, half-digusted, half-imploring, interrupting Sheppard's answer, which was started, but never finished. "Aw..."was ali Sheppard said.

Minutes later, when the tables cleared, Lawrence Boston, one of Bear's teammates, finished it for him: "You don't talk about it. You start talking about it, and everyone starts hurtingyou know?"

In LaGrange, Ill., Mrs. Cynthia D. Brown still grieves for her Owen, her only child.

"We were assured nothing was wrong with his heart," she said. "We dido't know. I'd have done anything to insure his life. Owen was a big, strong boy, but he was a mother's son. He would never have played if he knew it was a threat to his life; he loved life too much. He couldn't have known. He would have said something to me about it. And he never did."

In Bessemer, Ala., Mrs. Amanda Patton still thinks about her soo Chris.

Every eight. Every day. "It happeoed so quickly," she said.
"And be was doing so good. I just bope and pray that Maryland had nothing to do with it. I bope and pray nothing is wrong up there. The one thing I bate is that we never got to see him play, never saw the campus. Lord, I hope and pray they belp these boys. For us it's too late; we don't have Chris any-

In Birmingham, Ala., Donald Patton is bitter. "I can't believe what they say happeoed to Chris," be said. "I trust Driesell and his program as much as I can pick them up and throw them over the world. Someooe is lying to me."

In the Bronx, David Sheppard is

"There's nothing wrong with my son," be said, "Naturally he was very upset when the story came out about his heart. You remember the two fellows who passed away. It stayed in bis mind; they were good friends of his. But that story put Steve in the same category; be's never been sick a day in his life."

But oo campus, the aftershock is leveling.
From his office in the Center for Adult Education, Dr. Elkins, who never felt the need to speak to Driesell about the unfortunate coincidence, talks about how this year's team seems to be going forward. From his office in Cole Field Housewhere the band-lettered sign says, "Eat Em Up Bear"—Keboe, a man of mill-tary bearing, talks about there being "no evidence of a carryover on this

The Jokes Are Not Funny

From his room in Ellicott Hall, where the basketball players live, Brian Magid talks about the macabre jokes his friends bave started telling, like-'Hey, Brian, what're they feeding you guys over there? And from his office, Driesell talks about God. The basketball office is carpeted in Terrapin Red, the official color of Driesell's life. On the walls are pictures

a mock-up drawing of a national cham-pionship ring, dated 1976-77, with Steve Sbeppard's name oo the side. "I believe that people die when their time comes," Driesell said, pressing his fingers hard against his temples as if to crush the stooes of memory, "I've always told my players to go to church and he prepared. It must have been the Lord's will. Two people passed away. When we lose a big game, I just say the Lord had His reason. He had something io mind."

No, Driesell said, he did not know what the Lord bad in mind wheo Brown and Pattoo died, or when Sheppard came up with an irregular beartbeat. The Lord, he acknowleged, moves in mysterious ways.

There were those-including Elkinswho thought the unfortunate coincidence might bave an injurious effect on Maryland's ability to recruit basketball players. There were those—includ-ing Magid—who thought rival recruiters would approach prospects with a neat pitch that locluded questions like, "Are you sure you want to go to Maryland? Haven't you read the papers? Their players seem to be dying lately.'
Subtle stuff like that.

But if it happened-and Driesell sald it didn't, and, surprisingly, that he never thought it would—it didn't work. Because Maryland had one of its best recruiting years ever, getting two local scholastic all-Americans. Jo Jo Hunter and Bill Bryant. And anyway, opposing

"That'd be really obnoxious," said:
Digger Phelps of Notre Dame.
"Sordid," said Dave Gavitt of Providence. · "How low can you go?" asked Johnny Orr of Michigan.

They Were Turned Off

But both Hunter and Bryant expected it; they were surprised at not hearing it. In fact, it was the deaths at Maryland that originally turned them off Maryland.

"We were gonna go to school togeth-er," said Hunter. "When we started out, Maryland wasn't even in the pic-ture. We said to ourselves—We don't, wanna go there; maybe one of us will \ conk out." conk out.

Somewhat nervously, they laugh about it now.

Then, they asked questions. It was like pulling teeth, getting answers.

Hunter remembers asking an assistant coach, Joe Harrington about the situation at Maryland efter the deaths of Brown and Patton; he asked if all the players got physicals, if it was safe to attend the school.

"You see," Hunter said, "the coaches wouldn't bring the thing up on their own. We'd have to come around to it, and then they'd enswer only what we asked. We didn't think they liked to talk about it."

Ultimately, Hunter and Bryant chose Maryland for a combination of reasons, including its basketball program, its academic reputation and its proximity to their families.

But in the backs of their minds they wonder what they'd do if another player was to die.

"Three?" asked Bryant, incredulously. "It'd be so scary," Hunter said, "that be ready to day out and get a

The 1976-77 Maryland basketball press guide contains references to Brown and Patton only where necessary. Brown's name is in the all-tim records section, in the middle of the "single-season scoring" category. Patton's name appears, along with four other players, under a bold line of type that says, "Gone From 1975-76 Team." That's it.

Jack Zane, the sports information director, is responsible for the press guide. "The only reason to put any... thing special in there about them," he said, "was if I felt we had to defend something. I don't."

But Steve Sheppard is plastered throughout that guide like a speet of walipaper.

And he's ready to play.

The Thought That Went Away

"I used to think about my heart," Sheppard said. "Just for a second it would flash through my mind. Sometimes in the morning, sometimes in the evening whenever I was daydreaming. And I'd have to chase it away. But it's fading away now. I hardly ever think about it. My mother told me to stop thinking about it, so I did. I'm strong. I never get tired.

"And even if I wasn't strong, or I did get tired," he said, grinning just a little, setting up his ultimate truth, "I'd never tell."

Pontiac Field Name Changed to Silverdome

PONTIAC, Mich. (UPI)-The city commission has changed the official name of the year-old Pontiac Stadium to the Pontiac Silverdome.

The 78,000-seat bome of the Detroit Lions opened in the summer of 1975 as Pontlac Metrupolitan Stadium, or PonMet. Later the name was simplified to Pontiac Stadium, but officials decided the name didn't call attention to the facility's teflon dome.

The new name, however, is somewhat misleading. The solid portion of the stadium is silver, but the actual

Recently this question has been asked California radio listeners dozens of times daily as the finish line approached in what has become a bitter battle—some people might call it a real dogfight—over legalized dog racing in the natioo's most populous state.

On Tuesday, California voters will be asked to approve a constitutional ameodment that would legalize parimutuel betting on dogs and allow the establishment of eight tracks in the

Hardie Stands to Prosper

A measure was placed on the ballot through the enterprise of a 43-year-old former encyclopedia salesman turned harness racing driver named George Graham Hardie who stands to control part of the industry if the measure

But the ef-fort failed—partly because of intense obbying by the state's horse racing interest-and provoked a charge from one legislator that Haride had tried to win bis vote with a bribe. The promoter denied this charge.

After he failed to make headway in the Legislature, Hardie organized and financed a petitioo drive that collected. more than 600,000 signatures calling for the measure to be presented to the electorate under a provision of California law. It is this measure—Proposition 1-that will be voted on Tuesday.

Hardie has sought public support fo the measure largely on economic grounds. Dog rac ing is now legal in 12 states.

The director of the Los Angeles County Department of Animal Contro is among those predicting dire result if the measure passes.

'Legislation of commercial greyhound racing in California, said Betty Denny Smin, would result "in a drastic increase in the pet population; thousands of dogs that never qualified for the track would be 'dumped' on animal shelters and the taxpayers.

Dogs that would make excellent pets are now destroyed daily in shelters be-cause there is a lack of homes available. The fact is that if Proposition 13 passes, there will be an overabundance of greyhound dogs added to this tragic

Late this afternoon, the survivor with the biggest hankroll will carry away the winner-take-all prize of $7,000—all the entry fees, plus $2,000 added by the track. That's more money than most of the thoroughbreds racing at Penn National earn in a year.

Some of the contestants, like Prof. John Maceli of Ithaca College in Ithaca, N. Y., drove several bundred miles to reach the scene of battle. The professor taught two classes Friday morning, an 8 o'clock course in basic statistics and a 9 o'clock course called "What Is Msthematics?

national School soccer team uses global cooperation to promote goals.

Through five games this season U.N.I.S., with 23 players from 18 nations, has promoted 40 goals while holding its opponents to one, and has lost only once—on penalty kicks in a tiebreaker—in the last seven years.

"We have an advantage," says Anatol Popovich, the 35-year-old coach who was an all-American at Pratt.

"Soccer is the number one sport for

"Soccer is the number one sport for every athlete on the team, except for the three Americans. But it is a task to bleno their natural and acquired individual skills into one style of play. Too Good For Opposition

"The South Americans play a walking style with short passes; the Europeans use a running, long-ball attack. They must harmonize to be effective on the field."

U.N.I.S. wins even with discordant play. Last Thursday, in a helter-skelter match against Dwight-York, an Independent Schools Athletic League rival, the internationals oever meshed, but still won, 5-0. The only solid shot the losers took at the 4th Street soccer field was a Lou Groza-style kiek which field was a Lou Groza-style kick, which sailed over a 15-foot fence, bnunced twice and plopped into the East River. It may be that the team is too good for its private school opponents. The

"Some of the teams we play against don't even have uniforms," said Philippe Beooit of Haiti, reflectiog that soccer is an afterthought at most American schools.

"Other teams play soccer like we play basketball," added Deois Hansard with his distioctive French lilt. "Don't ask the last time we won in baskethall. Soccer is the only good team here."

As a result, the harmony that Popovich strives for is oever fully realized.

"We know we are better than every team," said Cbris Saavedra, a recent arrival from Colombia to U.N.L.S., arrival from Colombia to U.N.I.S., which is housed in a modern four-story facility on a platform over the East River at 25th Street. "I guess there really iso't a team spirit, Maybe if we lost we would really put it together." "Right oow, we can win while everyone plays an lodividual game." said Andrew Brown, a run-and-kick midfielder from Australia.

That is because UN.I.S., which was founded in 1947 by a group of United Nations parents who wanted an international education for their children, has developed a global reputation for its high school program, the International Baccalaureate. An I.B. diploma gives graduates access to universities in virtually every country of the world.

The school, which is aided financially by the United Nations through an eodowment fund, still is primarily for foreign-born students. Vacancies at the facility, with a capacity for 1,500 students ranging from kindergarten through high school, are then filled from applicants in the surrounding Murray Hill community. This year 56 percent of the students are foreign-born, 44 percent are American.

93d National Opens Tuesday With Shorter Run, Long Entry List Twin No.

The 93d edition of the National Horse Show gets under way in Madi-son Square Garden Tuesday with three rivals fighting the United States Eques-trian Team for international jumping supremacy and so many entries in the other divisions that the manager, Honey Craven, is wondering where to put them. In addition to the U.S.E.T., squads from Belgium, Ireland and Canada are entered in the international jumping division, traditionally the featured event of the show.

Several changes, some important and some minor, bave been made in the National. The most notable switch is that the show has been trimmed to six days. It will run only through Sunday instead of winding up a week from Tuesday as had been the standard

"The show always has run eight days since I've been here," said Craven. "But shortening it to six days will improve the program.

Craven is no newcomer to the National. This marks his 50th year with the organization and officials are get-ting the program together in his honor.

The 72-year-old Craven started as an assistant ringmaster, advanced to ringmaster and was made manager 17-years ago. He still practices on his English coaching horn an hour daily. During the show when the lights go down after the afternoon session, the sounds of an unseen horn waft through the empty Garden. Craven, hidden under the stands, is practicing.

The show also is operating without the services of Jim Fallon, Craven's assistant for more than a decade and without a president. In addition, Hackneys have been dropped from the program and the Nations Cup for international jumpers has been moved to the morning and afternoon sessions on Friday. It used to be held Monday afternoon and evening.

Fallon was appointed executive sec-retary of the American Horse Shows Association six months ago and resigned from the National.

This will mark the first year the show is being run without a president. When Ted Cushny, who had served three years, left 10 months ago, the board of directors decided to appoint a show committee to handle the details. Craven said that since the show was being shortened, something had to give and it was decided that because the Hackneys usually had the thinnest en-try, they would be eliminated.

As for the Nations Cup, this is the most important class for the interna-tional jumpers. The team that scores the most points in Nations Cups through a complicated formula during the year is declared the world cham-

In most of the world, the Nations Cup, competition attracts the most spectators. Not so at the National. So it was decided to move it back to the Friday matinee. Craven said that 145 entries from as Craven sant that 145 enthes from as far away as California had been re-ceived for the finals of the Maclay Trophy on the final day. This is a horsemanship class for junior riders and the winner of the final is regarded as one of the top young riders in the country.

"In addition, there are 110 entries in the class before the Maclay, which is sort of a warmup-type event for junior working hunters." Craven said.

"In the open jumper division [as contrasted to the international jumper section], we had close to 40 applications for entries. Last year we had only 16 and this year that's about all we can take. Our big problems are time and stall space for the horses. There is no adding every stalls in the Garden." adding extra stalls in the Garden."

The international and open jumpers also will compete together in the Gambiers Choice class. This marks the first time the two divisions have been matched in anything except the puis-

The United States Equestrian Team, coached by Bert de Nemethy, will be made up of Frank Chapot, the captain; Dennis Murphy, Buddy Brown and Mike Matz. At 20, Brown is the youngest rider, and at 42 Chapot, who has ridden in five Olympics, is the oldest on the sound.

Belgium, which finished third—just ahead of the U.S.E.T.—in last summer's Olympic Games will enter a team consisting of Ferdi Tyteca, Stany Van Paes-schen and his sister, Eva.

The Canadian riders will be lan Millar, the captain; Michele Vaillancourt, Jim Elder and John Simpson, while Ireland's squad will be made up of Eddie Macken, Commandant Ned Campion, Capt. Larry Riely and Lieut. Con Power. Macken was the runner-up in the individual competition in the 1974 world jumping championships.

New Track Opens Today

CANOVNAS, P.R., Oct. 30—The new EI Comandante, a plush $40 million racetrack hullt to replace the course that spawned many of the nation's leading Latin jockeys, was scheduled to open tomorrow after weeks of delay.

The original opening was postponed when horse owners staged a boycott for larger purses. With the help of a court injunction to prohibit owners from acting "in concert," the track has managed to fill 300 of the 1.200 available stalls, enough for the matinee program. A regular schedule of Sunday matinees and Wednesday and Friday night programs is planned.

German Soccer Enjoying A Surge in Fan Interest

ny's First Division socer scern is riding the crest of a boom in an economy that is only slowly pulling itself out of a year-tong stump. According to figures released by the Republic's 18 Bundesliga First Division clubs, a total of 2,679,356 fans paid about $11 million during the first 10 weeks of the leaves program.

of the league program. League officials now predict that by the time each club has completed its 34-match program, more than eight million fans will have poured through the turnstiles, topping the old attendance record of 7,179,485 in 1965-66. Last season's total was 6,859,219, which netted the clubs $28.8 million.

The lingering joy over West Germany's 1974 World Cup triumph is partly the reason for the boom, but many experts believe the leveling of standards is a more telling factor. The 18 teams are of nearly equal playing

In addition, some clubs such as newly-promoted Borussia Dortmund, F.C. Cologne or Bayern Munich can count on a faithful following despite fluctuating league fortunes. F.C. Cologne, a club that for years has been dismissed as the "prima donna of the Rhine" for its capcicious and unbalanced play, tops the home attendance list with an average 50,750 spectators per game.

This was the reward for the team's gaining tremendous fire under the direction of Coach Hennes Weisweiler, a strict disciplinarian. After 10 matches, Cologne was in third place with a 7-3 won-lost record.

Bayern Munich, winner of the European Champions Cup for the last three seasons, has the second biggest home attendance with an average of 49,442.

Financial Troubles for Borussia

Borussia Dortmund, a club on which nobody would have bet a dime only a few years ago, has been mobilizing the masses since celebrating its return to the big-league circuit with an unexpected 4-3 victory over H.S.V. Hamburg when the season was kicked off on Aug. 14.

Borussia has attracted an average home gate of 49,060, despite dropping to 10th place in the standing after its promising start. The club, which won the First Division championship in 1956, 1957 and 1963 in addition to the European Cup-Winners' Cup in 1966, was down and out in 1972 after being relegated to the Second Division. The fans stayed away and Borussia's

Sailing Center Is Closed; Lack of Support Blamed

The phone is disconnected. The doors are closed. The United States Sailing Center at Association Island. N. Y., is for sale. Lack of support was cited as the reason for putting the 100acre facility, site of the United States loss to sailing. We had a quality of racing that the world had never seen before, hut that's down the tube now," said Charles R. Wardwell, board chairman of the Association Island Recreational Corporation, which owns the property on Lake Ontario.

Olympic yachting trials as well as numerous national and world championships, on the block. "It's a terrible

"When it's gone and irreplaceable, maybe people will catch up with the idea, and then they'll say, What a shame," . . . It was just too good to lose," said Wardwell, a Tempest Class sailor from Winnetka, III.

The decision to close was made at the fall meeting of the board of direc-tors. The board announced it will sell the race committee equipment—including boats, motors and radios—separately io the spring.

Wardwell said the corporation was selling the island for the amount equal to its indebtedness, but he declined to disclose figures. Association Island, a nonprofit corporation supported by do-nations, was started with a "Y.M.C.A. concept," be explained. "Three years ago when the sailors came along, they put the sailors in charge. In effect, the island was given to sailing on a silver platter, along with the mortgage."

Harry Anderson, executive director of the United States Yacht Racing Union, expressed regret at the closing, especially since it is becoming increasingly difficult to find yacht clubs with the facilities to handle large regattas.

But Wardwell was philosophical about the reasons for the center's demise, "The world of (ooe-design) sailing is very parochial, fragmented. Sailors don't operate as a unit but tend to stay within class groups."

"The sport of sailboat racing could bave supported the facility if aailors had backed it 100 perceot. Large numbers of people thought it had great potential, but we who worked hard were too few in oumber."

Association Island waters boast a thermal effect that creates good hreezes constantly. It's a day's drive from New York, Boston or Chicago. But the season is short, three summer months, and the rustic, camp-like facilities drew complaints.

We bad superb hardware for running races-fleets of Boston whalers, the most modern radio equipment, the staff . . . but the facilities called for a big challenge. We needed people to chip in," Wardwell said.

The center encountered another problem, too. There was a modest charge of $12 a day for room and board. To try to keep the corporation afloat, a daily charge per boat was

"For a lot of kids, this was too much money. Large numbers of people are simply used to going to regattas and paying oothing but a $10 entry fee,"

Wardwell said it was doubtful another oational ceoter would be possible elsewhere. "To find the real estate, that's the real bearcat."

Some oow are considerlog a "ceoter io coocept," an organization to advise clubs on such things as running races, be said, "but I doo't know how you do that without a place."

President Ford has vetoed legislation that would allow the Coast Guard to implement the oew regulations, such as the oavigatioo light requirements, established by the Convection on International Regulations for Preventing Collisioos at Sea. The Presideot disapproved of a provision of the bill (H.R. 5446) that would give the legislative braoches the right to veto regulations of the President.

Oo the New Jersey legislative front, Governor Byrne bas signed into law a measure giving boatyards and marioas a maritime lieo on vessels for unpaid drydockage and storage charges

Life Is Not Any Garden of Roses For Vanquished on Tennis Tour

Jimmy Connors travels first class, but for Ernie Ewert ordering a simple steak is somethiog special. Like Connors, Ewert is a touring professional tennis player, but the similarity ends there. Connors, the United States Opeo champion, banked in excess of $1 million this year from his tournament winning, challenge matches and end-dorsements, Ewert, No. 26 in Australia, won less than $6,000.

Ewert is oot ranked among the top 32 players in the Association of Tennis Professionals standing, so he must play through a qualifying round for every tournament be eoters. He failed to make a single draw this year. "I've made a lot of frieods hut little else," said the 22-year-old Ewert after failing to qualify for the recent Island Holidays Classic on the Hawaiian Island of Maui, the final American tournament of the year. Had Ewert made the draw in the $100,000 tournament, he would have been guaranteed $500 as a firstround loser, enough to cover expenses.

In Maui, Ewert and the other prequalifiers received a 50 percent dis-count oo their hotel rooms and meals, but that was an exception to the rule because the sponsor was a hotel chain. Ewere has made little expense money since he started touring at the end of

> More News Of Sports On Pages 23, 25

1971. "I have to admit I didn't expect to find myself io this position after four years," said Ewert. "But it is so bard to improve if you don't get into regular

"Wheo the stars arrive you don't get any practice time, and you can't work on your faults if you don't practice. It Is tough to know what you're doing wrong, because the only guys who really know are the fellows you're challenging for a place in the draw. And there is no way a fellow competitor is going to help you improve your game, because it could mean money out of his pocket."

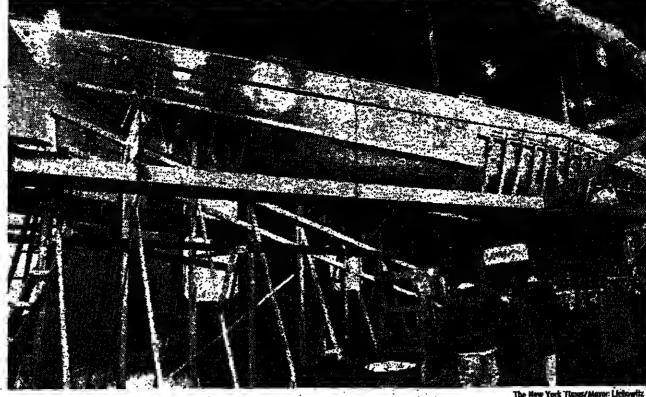

One Last Shot

Ewert is luckier than most young pros because his parents help him out. His father, a butcher, owns a small stable of borses at Deer Park, about 20 miles outside Melbourne, in addition to his two butcher shops.

Ewert was accepted for the Australian Open this year and he got into Wimbledon in 1973 wheo most of the leading players boycotted the tourna-ment. "But that's about it," he said, ooting his national ranking dropped from No. 15 in 1974 to 26th in 1975.

"I guess I'm not dedicated enough," Ewert said. "But I'm going back home to work on my game. I'm going to give the tour one last shot."
Of the $6,000 Ewert earned this year

-most of it in Europe and Latin America where wealthy sponsors run small tournaments for their friends-he had to spend $1,500 oo a round-the-world air ticket. He spent six winter weeks in Florida, this summer in Europe, and the fall in the United States, where he won some money on the American Express circuit, and Latin America.

TO CHALLENGE FOR CUP: The hull of the 12-Meter yacht Enterprise being constructed at the Minneford Boat Yard on City Island. The Enterprise is scheduled to be a challenger for the America's Cup.

What They Are Saying

Mark Bailey, Long Beach State fullback used mostly as a blocker, is confident of his chances in pro football: "It may sound egotistical, hut I think I'm exactly what a pro running back is supposed to be. I think I have the strength, size, speed and intelligence." Bailey is 6 feet 2 inches and 225 pounds, and does the 40-yard dash in 4.5 seconds. He adds: "I watched Chuck Muncie Inow with the New Orleans Saints] at California. I know I can play pro football if he can."

Bobby Richardson, former Yankee second baseman running for Congressman in South Carolina, was asked what his plans would be if he lost on Tuesday: "It's just like when I was with the Yankees. I never give any thought to losing."

Gene Upshaw, Raiders' guard, about the officials after each team was assessed 13 penalties in Oakland's 18-14 victory over the Green Bay Packers: "Those guys must have heen getting paid by the hour."

Eddie Westfall of the Islanders rationalizes his team's 4-1 loss to the Montreal Canadiens: "The game tonight has no bearing on the season. There's a loog way to go before we meet in the playoffsif the Canadians make the playoffs."

Mark Fidrych, Detroit Tigers' rookie star, explains why he's not interested in show business: "I'm no actor. I'm just a hallplayer, that's all I want to he. It's what the Man upstairs said I should be."

Melvin Morgan, Cincinnati Bengals' rookie from Gulfport, Miss., on why he refrained from spiking the ball or dancing in the end zone after scoring on an interception-lateral play against the Houston Oilers: "Tommy Casanova prepared me before the game. He told me during the week that the guys from the West Coast dance. The guys from the South don't. They just play ball."

Mike Voight, University of North Carolina running back, on a questionnaire that asked him to name his favorite person in history: "The girl who sat across from me in History 12."

Jocko Conlan, 75-year-old retired umpire, on why Pete Rose is his favorite player: "In my stage of life, Rose would be the only player I'd pay to see play. He's so colorful and so daring. He lights up the ballpark when the game starts."

Orantes Gains 2d Place In Grand Prix Standing

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (UPI)—Manuel Orantes of Spain, winner of three straight tournament, has moved into second place in the Grand Prix tennis standing. Apparently recovered from a summer-long elbow injury, Orantes downed Eddie Dibbs in five sets to win the Trofeo Code Godo championships in Barcelona last Sunday and earn 80 Grand Prix points.

The Spanish Davia Cop star oow has 661 points and trails the leader, Raul Ramirez, by 52 points. Ramirez has 713 poiots after picking up 40 for reaching the semifinal round at Barcelona. The top point-getters at year's end split a boous pool of $1 million supplied by the Commercial Union Assurance Companies. Additionally, the top eight finishers qualify to play in the Masters tournament, Dec. 5-12, in Houston.

Georgia-Florida Game on TV The Southeastern Conference football game oext Saturday between Georgia and Florida will be telecast oationally by the American Broadcast-ing Company. The game, which will begin at 2 P.M. New York time, will be played in the Gator Bowl in Jackson-ville, Fla.

1976 Deficit on Stadium Reported by Cincinnati

CINCINNATI (AP)-Despite record attendance in 1976 for baseball and football, plus the National League championship series and the World Series, the City of Cincinnati lost $418,604 on the operation of Riverfront Stadium. The city reported it earned $3.6 million from the stadium, but it cost $4 million to operate and

The largest expense was $2.4 million the year's debt on the 56,000-seat facility that opened in 1970, according to the city administration report to the Cincinnati City Council.

The city also had to pay property taxes to Hamilton County of $313,-869.81. The county returned $84,118 of the tax money to the city for its 26.8 percent share of taxes collected within the city. The remainder was distributed to county offices end other agencies like the achool system, the

FIVE TOWNS BMW WE'RE UP FRONT ABOUT OUR

BACK ROOM. Buy a BMW, and it's not what's up front that counts. It's what's down bock.

After all, a BMW is always a BMW. A consistently superb mochine. But the way that machine will be serviced, that isn't necessorily consistent.

So at Five Towns BMW, the first thing we do is take you through our service de partment, show you our Express Service in action, let you see the cars we provide if yours is serviced avernight.

We figure, if we have nothing to hide, you'll figure you have everything to gain doing business with Challenge Avis.

See if our car service network will work better for you.

Avis has three challenging questions you should ask before you sign any car lease which includes service.

How convenient are the locations? How national is the service network? How good is the service? After you hear the answers, find out if we can give you better ones. We've got a reputation for trying harder. Make us live up to it.

You'll like riding on our reputation.

Good News For People Who Have Always Wanted AVolvo But Thought They Cost Too Much.

If you've had your sights set on a Volvo, but price has been a problem, there's no need to lower your sights.

Just see a Volvo dealer today.

We're having a once-in-a-decade sale. Which means you'll not only see prices on Volvos like we've never offered before. You'll get more for your trade-in than we could ever offer before.

(We might add that with new car prices going up in '77, there's never been a better time to buy a new car than now.)

Unlike a lot of sales, the Volvo Sale doesn't feature a picked-over selection of cars. You'll be able to select from a full array of fully-equipped Volvos.

You can choose a 2-door, 4-door or station wagon. From either our 240 series. Or from our luxurious Volvo 260 series.

No matter what you choose, you'll end up with a car that has become legendary for its safety, comfort and intelligent design.

doesn't cost more to have more. The Volvo Sale

We wanted to free some space on the roster so that if anything comes up we'll be able to move." Melchionni knows you can't win consistently with a guard-oriented offense. Melchionni spent most of the day calling the other N.B.A. teams, asking them to notify him if they want to move any players.

"You look at rosters like Milwaukee, easiest for hlm. "The main thing is the game." van Breda Kolff said. "I'm not trying to get into a personal thing, I've guarded him before. I'll do the best 1 can. One thing I know is that he'll be ready. And if you're not ready for him, he'll SYDNEY, Australia, Oct. 30 (AP)-Jack Nicklaus, the defender, opened a two-stroke lead in the Australian open golf championship today with a 54hole score of 215.

Nicklaus overtook the second-round leader, Curtis Strange, after a par 72 on the tough 7,100-yard Australian Club course. Strange, who had a four-stroke lead before today's play, slipped to second after posting a 77. David Graham of Australia Is in third place at 219 after three rounds. one stroke behind Graham is Bruce Crampton of Australia, who had a 6S for today's low round.

Young people are learning them again with the help of The New York Time and "the 4th R"... reality.

more schools these days are concentrating more and more on getting "back to basics." And many of them are turning to The New York Times for help.

Getting back to the old goals in education doesn't mean going back to old methods, and by using The Times in their classrooms, educators aren't going back to the "current events" approach. Far from it. "Current events" was a vague idea designed to let young people know there was a world outside the classroom, but it didn't do much to bring the world inside. Things are different today. Much different.

hen schools add The New York Times to their classroom programs, they get special help for teachers in workshops, in individual sessions, in curriculum aids that make planning easier and classroom work more stimulating.

They get special programs that have been developed, tested and proven effective over years of work in schools all over the Northeast in every discipline from elementary education to social studies.

Times professionals work directly with teachers to show them how to apply current information to almost any subject they teach. They learn how to make a column on rock music help a slow reader, how a department store ad can help a teacher understand a student's lifestyle, how a food feature can expand the scope of career education.

he Times provides free materials for teachers and for students to increase skills and awareness. The materials include a weekly newspaper for student use in relating topics in the news to their own personal lives, and monthly background reports to help them understand ideas and trends from the electoral process to the influence of music on American life. Teachers get guides to help them in lesson planning and to show them how to get the best advantages of the special resources at their fingertips every morning in The New York Times.

All of the special material is free, and students and teachers get a special educational discount on The Times itself. The only charge made for any Times school program is 10 cents a copy for The Times . . . half the regular newsstand price . . . and the charge includes delivery directly to the school.

or schools interested in getting back to basics, The New York Times is proving to be the best basic tool. For more information on how The Times can help in your community, drop this coupon in the mail.

and I managed to get my three also, My shooting was erratic, however, for it took seven shells to accomplish this and one of the blrds, taken as it was going away, would have heen lost in a distant meadow had it not been for the retrieving efforts of Star. We were shooting-with permission and for a fee-on a large farm on the outskirts of the Refuge, and all during the time we were there hundreds of geese, both near and far, were visible at all times. The 10-square-mile Refuge, located at the north end of Cayuga Lake, was established in 1937 and is the main reason for the splendid gnose shooting in the region.

The day before our hunt we visited with the Refuge manager, Sam Waldstein, who told us that an estimated 30,000 geese were within the Refuge at that time. It also has a wide variety of other water fowl, including black ducks, mallards, pintails, teal and wood

A limited number of hunters are permitted within the Refuge itself. This is done primarily through reservations, although if one does not show up an hour hefore legal shooting time at the Refuge one forfeits his reservation and it goes to one of the ever-present hunters who have arrived on a standby basis, The day we visited the Refuge, 25 hunters shot 23 geese and 87 ducks by closing time, which is 12 noon. Hunting is allowed on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays only, and steel shot, rather than lead, must be used.

The Refuge also brings pleasure to a variety of visitors-some 300,000 annually - including hird-watchers, hikers, picnickers and fishermen.

Those who are planning to hunt the Refuge would be well advised to scout the area ahead of time in order to plan where they would like to set up their decoys, whether from hoat or shore, because snap judgments in the predawn darkness are not good.

The Refuge's address is R. D. 1, Box 1411, Seneca Falls, N. Y. 13148 Telephone (315) 568-5987.

FLOWERY BRANCH, Ga., Oct. 29 (AP)-Jerry Hansen, the racing stockbroker from Wayzata, Minn., had no troubla cruising to a record sixth straight championship in Formula A racing as the oatlooal amateur championships of the Sports Car Club of America got under way today.

In so doing, Hansen, a longtime competitor in several of the 21 divisions being contested here this weekend, gained his 15th title over all, also a record.

Hansen is entered in two other divisions in this competition of regional S.C.C.A. champions this weekend and is a good bet to notch his 16th and 17th titles. Today he drove a Lola T330, which be sometimes races on the Formula 5000 professional road-racing

In Soccer

By ALEX YANNIS

Jerry Yeagley doesn't own as many flashy sports jackets as Bobby Knight and isn't temperamental with referees, but his soccer team at Indiana University appears to be on the winning path of the school's basketball squad. Although Yeagley doesn't have as many scholarships to offer and Indiana is only soccer soccer, the Hoosiers are king in the Midwest this week and ranked third in the country.

Yeagley has only three or four full scholarships, Some schools have 11, the maximum allowed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association. He also has just one foreigner on his squad, indicating that native players in college can be as good as anyone from over-

"Jerry has proved that Americaniza-tion works," Nick Matavuli, who has been associated with youth and soccer Yeagley. "The only thing some of the players lack is that super touch some foreigners have."

"We don't have a lot of super players," Yeagley, 35-year-old who was born in Myerstown, Pa., said, "but we have an excellent blend of players." St. Louis a 5-1 Victim

The beauty about this team," said Matavuli, who took a team of young-sters to the Soviet Union four years ago, "is that almost all the players were born here. They overwhelm opponents by their enthusiasm."

Indiana, which will meet Cleveland State today in an important game, has seven shutouts in 13 games, winning 12 and tying one. The only tie came against Western Illinois in what Yeagley described as a "very frustrating game." Their biggest triumph was a 5-1 victory over St. Louis. They have scored 64 goals and allowed eight:

"Success has come rather quickly."
Yeagley said. "We didn't expect to achieve promineoce so early. The philosophy of the school is to go cut and support all sports. We expect to have 11 full soccer scholarships soon, and when that happens we will be really strong."

Yeagley, who played for West Chester (Pa.) State's championship team in 1961, joined the Indiana faculty in 1963 after completing requirements for his master's degree at the University of

"I got the hint we were going to beat people when we were losing, 2-0. to Akron and we came back to win it."
Yeagley said by phone from his home in Bloomington. "That also proved that our preseason success was not a fluke."

Yeagley lost his two top defenders through graduation but adjusted his defense well to thwart opponents. He put George Perry, a junior, as a sweeper behind three fullbacks and the Hooslers have been dominating midfield play thanks to Rick Spray, Charlie Fajkus and Dave Shelton.

Coach Cites Speed

"My midfielders are exceptional athletes with a lot of experience," said Yeagley, whose team beat Mexico City, 1-0, before 8,000 fans at Indiana. "We don't bave enough depth up front, but we have outstanding speed."

The Hoosiers also attracted more than 6,000 for their game against St. Louis, in which a freshman, Angelo DiBernardo, scored the five Indiana goals. They expect as big a crowd today against Cleveland State. "We start five freshmen," said Yeagley, a good recruiter. "We have four seniors, but only two start. Most of my players are from Illinois and Missouri, but we will recruit nationwide at a higger scale from now oo."

"I'd like to say something about my goalie," Yeagley added. "His name is Terry Feld. He is quite short. Actually, he looks like a liability in the goal, but he is terrific." At one time during this season, the

Hoosiers played six games in 10 days, winning them all. It sounds like a Bobby Knight schedule, but it was |Reprinted from vesterday's late editions|

turnoff: the brown and white Hotel Aerogolf, which looks a little like a 150-room nondenominational airport chapel: very modern, very discreet, rather distinguished. (Guests of the Aerogolf are granted privileges at the adjacent Grand Ducal Golf Club, but it is best to reserve a time well in advance, particularly for weekends.) After checking in, we sat down to the $8 table d'hote lunch (dinner cost the same). My marinated herrings, Charolais steak and fresh strawberries were first-rate. And talk about international dining! The language the Luxembourgers spoke was semi-Germanic, the cuisine was French and the waiters in this prosperous land were Italiao, Portuguese and Yugoslav. The waiters made Erika particularly at home by alerting her to the occasional appearance of a rabbit on the lawn outside the glassed-in restaurant.

"At the age of zero, a child learns Luxembourgish," Georges explained, "a language that is closest to German, so when you go to school at 6, you learn German and at 7 you start learning French. At 12 you learn English and at 16 you must take a foreign language.

"What's a foreign language here?" Erika asked.

"Spanish, Portuguese, Italiao. On the other hand, French is the official language and all our written communicatioos are in French. German is the secood language and Luxembourgish, which everyhody here speaks, is officially the third language, mostly verbal rather than written. The rest of the world isn't going to begin to understand Luxembourgish, so everyone takes foreign languages very seriously in a land that's two bours long and one hour wide by car."

Of those 999 square miles, one-third are covered by forests, and we began to see some of them as soon as we set out on our afternoon drive through northeast Luxembourg. Although It was an especially hot June afternoon, the foliage shading the road was refreshingly green and cooling and, in the Mullerthal Valley, there were huge grotesque rock formations jutting out over the road, The roads were wellpaved and well-marked; with frequent parking areas, many parked cars and very few people to be seen.

"You may not believe this," Georges sald, "but there are thousands of people inside those woods today. You know, Luxembourg invented the dr.veand-walk circular tour. In the early 1950's, an office worker here named Ernie Schmit, who liked to hike, discovered two simple facts: First, people had more and more cars; second, rather than walk from A to B, they preferred to drive to A and then walk from A to A. On his weekends, Schmit began systematizing various walks that took you back to where you started without retraciog your steps."

A Night on the Moors With the Bronte Family

By SCOTT HUME

am oot the sort who sets much store in the supernatural. Postboxes do not become witches, shadows demons, in the loneliness of a full-mooned Halloween, nor do I suffer the superstitious gladly. But late one night on a Yorkshire moor, I was given a lesson in tolerance. My wife, Mary, and I were on a motor tour of England last fall. Her loterest in Victorian political history and mine in Victorian literature had kept us moving about the country, visiting the bomes of Disraeli, Dickens and other personal "shrines." One of my choices during our planning for the trip had been to visit Haworth, tucked among the folds of the Yorkshire countryside and found on only the most detailed maps. Haworth had produced three of the most remarkable 19th-century literary imaginations; the Brontë sisters.

No matter that this tiny village has since become famous -we had the feeling of having stumbled upon it, even though it was our precise destination. The 20 miles that separate it from the soot-blackened town of Bradford to the south is a peopleless stretch of hilly grazing land, scrub vegetation and sheep. One drives up over one more hill and Haworth suddenly appears like some somber Brigadoon.

The town is arranged along one principal street, which moves determinedly up along the side of a hill, stopping at the top where town merges again into moor. It is a village that might have been taken wholly from an Edward Gorey drawing: Dark stone and airless quiet, A few shops, a post office/bookstore, a few small inns, Spare and compact as though the land begrudges the space it takes,

The day we spent there touring the sights was overcast and damp. We walked respectfully through the Parish Church of St, Michael and All Angels, cold and simple, where the Rev. Patrick Bronte had been parson. We toured the Haworth Parsooage where the widower clergymao had raised his daughters Charlotte, Emily and Anne, and his rakehell son, Branwell. We paused to look at the sofa upon which Charlotte died at age 39, at that outliving ber sisters and brother.

We are a pleasant dinner at a small candle-lit restaurant, discussing the family over lager and lamb. We said what every visitor to liaworth must say: Being in that lonely town makes the stormy passions of "Wuthering Heights," the strange gothicism of "Jane Eyre," the moody introversion of "The Tenant of Wildfell Hall," all seem much more

We walked outside into an incredibly dark night. There were oo street lamps in Haworth, and very little other light after dark. It is a town that retreats into itself early in the evening. A wind which must have swelled close to 30 miles an hour at times roared up over the hill and across the moor with such swirling fury that we had almost to yell to be heard at arm's length.

erhaps it was the cumulative effect of 12 hours spent in the sobering atmosphere of the village. Perhaps it was the discussion of the dark novels and mad Branwell over beers. r perhaps it was just that imp of the perverse that causes travelers to overcome their normal reservations and seek adventures around which later to memorialize their travels.

Whatever the reason, standing in the dark and the wind, I suggested to Mary that we take a walk out on the moor in search of the ghost of Catherine Earnshaw or whatever or whoever else might still linger there.

The imp attacks different travelers at different momenta; Mary resisted, wisely pointing out that it was pitch black, that we had no way of knowing what was out there or how to get around, and that it was probably private property anyway. She didn't need to add the most compelling caution of all: It was damned eerie out there in the dark. But nothing summons hravado like the misgivings of a companion, and I repeatedly assured her that there was oo need to worry.

She finally agreed to join me, and we started across the fields, stumbling on the dark and uneven ground. I could not resist the temptation to add to the Halloweenish feel of the eight by suggesting that I heard voices in the wind or by suddenly stopping in half-mock fright.

We climbed to the top of a hill and stood swaying with the wind, saying oothing hut peering across the hlack moor and blacker sky. "Charlotte! Emily! Anne! Branwell!" I called out. There was no echo, no response. I would have called again, but Mary spoke up: "Will

laughed.

o we started our return to Haworth. We had walked only a short way when Mary stopped short. "What is that?" "Are you going to try to scare me now?"

"No, really. Listen." I didn't take her seriously notil I felt it, too. Toe ground was rumbling heneath us. We turned-and saw four horses, shadows in the night, spring over the hill behind us. There was no question in which direction they were coming and none who they were. "It's the Brontes!" I screamed with a nervous laugh as we ran away as fast as we could across the fields. We could hear the sound of their hooves, following us no matter how we twisted and turned. Mary tripped, rolled and was up and running again

Just as they were almost upon us we dove over the stone wall that separated the moor from the road from which we had strayed. Laughing, wide-eyed, out of breath, we looked at each other in disbelief. Had we really seen them? Yes! There really had been four of them! Too strange!

When we picked ourselves up, the horses were still on the other side of the wall. Tired too, their breath shot out of their postrils into the wind. There was a moment wh we all faced each other in silence. Then they were gone

I still do not believe in the supernatural, but neither do I make fun of those who do.

THIS NEW YEAR'S EVE A year's worth of memories in one glorious winter holiday at the magnificent Diplomat - the resorts of resorts. Golf on two 18 hole courses. Tennis on 19 courts - day and night. Swimming? Ocean beach or 5 pools. Our own marina. 9 distinctive and unique restaurants. Dancing nightly to any of 6 combos. Teen-fun in their own Rip-Off Room. A whole program for children, counselor-supervised. As entertainment? Well, Sammy, Liza and Lou kick off the winter season. Horses, dogs, Jai Alai are all within easy reach) as are the Hollywood-Ft. on the Vistafjord.

Norwegian America Line and Delta Airlines have put together a Fly/ Cruise package that's easy to take. You fly to the ship on the airline run by professionals," and sail with a cruise line that has six decades of experience.

From October to May, you will sail on a ship that was built for world cruising (under Norwegian registry) and discover new worlds in the Caribbean. The Vistafjord is 25.000 tons but carries only 700 passengers—other ships this size carry up to 200 more. And there's one European crew member for every two passengers.

The spacious dining room can seat everyone at one sitting, so you're never rushed through a meal. Most of the staterooms are outside accommodations and most have bathtubs. There are two pools, a sauna, a gym, a full casino and plenty of shipboard entertainment. And lots of quiet places for when you feel like doing nothing.

In fact you will enjoy the ship so much, you won't want to get off in port. Until you see the ports... Martinique, Haiti, Curacao, not to mention Puerto Rico and St. Thomas (with duty-free shopping). And most every cruise visits La Guaira in South America.

There is a 1-week cruise, and a dozen 2-week cruises, sailing on Saturday evenings.

See your travel agent now or contact Norwegian America Line, 29 Broadway, New York, N.Y., 10006 (212-422-3900).

His letter seems to be based on a blanket assumption that oll animol trainers are evil that all onimals hate being "trained." In fact, snw no evidence that the White Mountain bears were mistreated.]

To the Editor:

After reading the articles about New Hampshire, my daughter and I drove there for the Oct. 1 weekend. The foliage was at its peak and we covered more than ISO miles through the White Mountains. We think we saw nearly every point of interest suggested by the author. Unbelievably, the temperature at the cog railway station on Mount Washington was 70 degrees. Our only regret was that we could have used another day. MATILOA R. DURGET

BULGARIA

To the Editor:

Complaints by some readers about costly transit visa charges in Bulgaria shouldn't mislead travelers into thinking that country doeso't welcome American tourists. The scenery is excellent, the people are hospitable and the accommodations are acceptable (or eveo good).

The capital city of Sofia is neat and pleasant (with a great Orthodox cathedral); Veliko Turnovo, the ancient capital, is one of the most picturesque towns in Europe; Varna and the Black See Coasi have the best beaches I've seen in Europe-and at more reasonable rates than most.

I wouldn't want to live in Bulgaria, but it's not a bad place to visit. And United States dollars can go far there. ROBERT M. POCKRASS whal it has done to improve rail service in the United States, I believe a renaissance is upon us. Recently I took advantage of the U.S.A. Rail Pass to travel to New Orleans and Chicago and back to New York. I found prices for food reasonable and the meals wholesome. The employees were more than courteous and the service just great. I also found the train a fine wav to meet interesling people and to just

I rode such famous trains as the Broadway Limited after hearing about poor trackage on this line, and I was surprised to find that this was not the case. Generally, the ride was smooth oo all the trains I took. I would say the return to the train as a strong alternative to the automobile is long overdue.

Oueens To the Editor:

My wife and I, having traveled widely, but very little by train, decided to go to California and return by Amtrak. A month before leaving we reserved a bedroom on the Lake Shore Limited, a 100 percent reserved train. We were assigned Bedroom F on Car 4901, train 49 leaving Syracuse, N.Y., at 11:59 P.M., Sept. 8. The tickets were paid for through American Express, and we received them about three weeks before leaving time from our travel agent.

We looked forward with great anticipation to a pleasant trip. On our departure date, we boarded the train and were informed that there was no Car 4901 and no bedroom F. The only thing available was a single roomette. We couldn't turn back. Our luggage was in the baggage car. Thus followed the worst night we have ever spent.

We have traveled in the Orient, the South Pacific, Europe and on safaris io Africa and are used to inconveniences

Notes: The Ultimate Buy-A Whole Town

By JOHN BRANNON ALBRIGHT

Many Americans with a taste for European life and a bulging bank account have dreamed of buying themselves a bit of the Continent-a chalet in Switzerland, an apartment in Paris, a villa in Italy. But every so often there comes to light a situation that beggars such run-of-the-mill dreams: a chance to purchase an entire town.

Cauvel, a medieval village uninhabited save for a lone farmer, lies in the south of France, about 120 miles west of Avignon and a half-mile from the Tarn River Gorge, the French "Grand Canyon." It consists of a chapel, a well, a communal oven, a grain mill, a stone cross, a castle-like manor house and the ruins of a dozen er se farmhouses-and it is all for sale. The price: about $15,000.

Pierre Collin DuFresne, a retired manufacturer, bought Cauvel in 1967 after he heard about it from his son, 2 French Government geologist who had been assigned to the region. He is hopeful that whoever acquires the village will restore it and retain its medieval style. According to his daughter, Isabelle, who lives in New York City, "Were some group willing ic live there and no the restoration work, we might consider letting them stay rent free. We'd also consider trading for some lano in the United

Anyone undertaking the development of the village would have to create sewage system and have water piped in, but, according to Miss DuFresne, electricity is already on the property. National and local funds are available to help finance a development project, she says. The French National Tourist Office in New York confirms that the village is indeed for sale and adds that financial assistance may be available for its restoration. If Government funds are used in the restoration, however, the tourist office explained, no architectural changes can subsequeotly be made without Governmental ap-

WINDSURFING CHAMPIONSHIPS

Windsurfing is something like surfing-but without the surf-and like water skilng-but wilhoul a tow boat. It can also be likened to sailing-except that there is no place to sit, which accounts for the slogan emblazoned on many a practioner's T-shirt: "Windsurfers Do It Standing Up." From Nov. 15 to 20 in the Bahamas, 400 or so windsurfers will be standing on 12fcot - long, 40 - pound suffboard - like hulls and manipulating 56 square feet of sail attached to a 14-foot mast while participating in the 1976 World Championships of Windsurfing. The competition will cover three categories: freestyle, slalom and hot dogging. Visitors to Nassau and Paraoise Island will be able to watch the windsurfers without charge from various vantage points along the shore. An estimated 35,000 people worldwide have tried windsurfing, which began in 1970, according to the sponsor of the championships, Windsurfer International, Inc., 1038 Princeton Drive, Marina Del Rey, Calif. 90291.

artists and crafts people. A diorams in Rider House shows how old Danbury was laid out before it was laid low. The buildings are open from 2 to 5 P.M. Wednesdays through Saturdays. Admission is free, Resistance to Tryon was light in and around Danbury, but Generals Benedict Arnold and David Wooster were rallying the Connecticut militia elsewhere. Arnold, rankled because Congress had bypassed him for promotion, came to the rescue of his native state, but the "Mr. Hyde" in him was to emerge four years later.

Tryon, not wishing to repeat the disastrous British retreat from Concord in 1775, took another route back tn his embarkation point, proceeding through Ridgebury and Ridgefield.

The French Army under Count de Rochambeau, in 1781, followed this same route through Ridgebury on its way to join the American army prior to Yorktown. The Ridgebury Congregational Church on Ridgebury Road, built in 1760, is just down the road from where the main body of French pitched their tents in what is still an upen field. The Captaio Henry Whitney House, a handsome, yellow Colonial at the intersection of Ridgebury and Old Stagecoach Roads, was there when advanced French units camped nearby.

Folinw Tryon's progress along Ridgebury Road toward Ridgefield, bearing left where the road forks and goes into North Salem Road-State Route 116. He and his troops camped at about where a historical marker recalls how 200 men led by Wooster attacked them on April 27, 1777, and got away with 40 prisoners. Now clock exactly one mile to a tall, narrow memorial on the right side of the road. It marks the spot where Wooster, harassing the British, tried to capture their cannon, had one horse shot out from under him, mounted another and had turned in the saddle to urge his men on when a musket ball hit him in the spine. He was paralyzed and died six days later to Danbury.

Clock another 1.2 miles to the top of a rise just outside Ridgefield where the road squeezes between two high embankments. It was here that Arnold had his men throw up a barricade of farm carts and other obstacles across the road and positioned 100 men in the path of Tryoo's force. The British turned Arnold's left and the Ameri-

occurred later that year, 1779, on July 5, when a force of 2,600 British, Hessians and Loyalists commanded by Tryon and Brigadier General Garth wreaked havoc in the Havens, Fairfield and Norwalk. Fairfield lost more than 160 buildings, Norwalk about 250. The British merched off with $150,000 in loot. The last raid was in 1781 when Benedict Arnold, by then exposed as a traitor to the American cause and serving as a brigadier general in His Majesty's Army, returned to his native state with fire and sword, Mr. Hyde having taken over completely.

American armies were on their way south to confront Cornwallis at Yorktown in what was to be the climactic battle of the war. Arnold, born and raised in Norwich and therefore familiar with the area, was sent with 1,700 men on 35 ships to raid rebel stores American troops back north. Arnold quickly occupied New Lon-don and, while he visited with a sister, his men pillaged and set fire to the city. He later claimed that the fires were accidental and that his men did all they could to put out the flames.

While the city burned, Lieut. Col. Eyre was demanding Fort Griswold's surrender. When the fort's commander. Lieut. Col. William Ledyard, refused, Eyre informed him that he and his men could expect no quarter. During the 40-minute action that followed, the fort's guns, some of them mammed by experienced naval gunners, fired grapeshot with devastating effect into the oncoming British ranks. Eyre and his second in command, Major Montgomery, were killed, but the attackers fought their way into the fort. Ledyard offered his sword in surrender to a Loyalist officer-whose identity is still in doubt-and was stabbed with it. An American officer stabbed the Loyalist and the British proceeded to bayonat and shoot every American in sight. Reports of casualties conflict. Governor Trumbull reported that 70 to 80 were killed in the fort, all but three of them after the surrender. Arnold reported that his men found 85 dead in the fort and 60 wounded, Connecticut's "Valley Forge" in Israel Putnam Memorial Park, off State Route 58 midway between Danbury and Redding, is where some 5,000 American troops, their wives and carep followers—the right wing of the American line, extending from Redding to the Hudson River at the time-were quartered during the winter of 1778-79 under Putnam's command. They included 200 free black soldiers and a number of Indians. Surviving records of the excampment show that 1,500 of the men had no shoes and 400 were coatless. A tour map available at the park headquarters building guides visitors to the remains of the hutments in which the men lived, a reconstructed officer's but and a reconstructed guardiouse. The state's most charming Revolutionary War-site is probably Wethersfield, a town with over 100 old homes holog its streets, many of them from the 17th and 18th centuries. It can be reached from I-91 off I-95. Signs on Mein Street direct visitors to the Webb-Deane-Stevens Museum, a threehome complex run by the National Society of Colonial Dames of America in Connecticut. The museum is open year 'round from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. Tuesday through Saturdays; 1-4 on Sundays from mid-May to mid-October. Admission is $1 per house or $2.50 for of cars. A car is too private, After a few wrestling matches, I decided that any evening dates with strangers whose credentials seemed O.K. would be confined to public places like restaurants and acceptable nightchubs. I generally iosisted on paying my nalf of the check.

As I approach 60, the potential problems with meo diminish, but I still observe reasonable limits in trusting strangers. After all, in some countries, such as France and Denmark, men judge women by other criteria than

Once I was spending the weekeod at Pescara, a beach town and resort oo the Adriatic coast of Italy, I was then about 35. It was Sunday and I discovered the only watch I had with me had quit. As I was strolling along the beach in the early afternoon, a man of about my age caught up with me and asked if he could stroll with me. At least, I think that's what be said. My Italian is sketchy, to say the least, and his English was ditto. I could see no harm in his companionship, especially as it was broad daylight oo a crowded beach.

I iodicated that my watch was brokeo. He communicated somehow that he bad a friend or brother or uncle who would fix the watch that day. I handed the watch over and he disappeared with it. When I told this to friends later, the immediate reaction was: "I'll bet you never saw bim or your watch again!" On the cootrary, he was back in an hour with the watch working perfectly and refused to take any money.

On another occasion, at Ravenna, I struck up a cooversation with the desk clerk. He seemed very pleasant and was regularly employed at this good hotel. My questioning revealed that he had a fiancée. Thus, when he invited me to join them for dinner at her father's seafood restaurant at nearby Ravenna al Mare, I accepted with pleasure. I insisted, bowever, on going and returning by taxi; I didn't trust him that much. Not only did we have a great dinner, with the enormous portions pressed on "friends of of their friends afterward to a ooeroom cabin, tilted precariously over ooe of the many canals through the marsh grass. A buge oet was periodically winched into the canal and back, bringing up miscellaneous collections of fish, shrimp, octopus and unidentiflable squirming objects, all to be tessed ioto deep fot and eaten immediately like potato chips, with the local cheap wice.

Once, eating alooe io a large restaurant with orchestra and dance floor, I was being ogled by a man alooe at a table nearby. He sent a note via the waiter asking if he could join me. Since I intended to return to my hotel in a taxi by myself, I could see oo barm in saying yes. This man turned out to be the world's worst dancer and there was oo way I could get rid of him. I left as sooo as I could and had sore toes for a week. So it doesn't always work out.

I know many womeo who have traveled by themselves, whether on business or for pleasure, and, in general, I think they are too timid. They cut themselves off from the life of the country ocedlessly. The lone woman should have more self-confidence; many activities are unexceptionable.

My favorite pastimes are walking and people-watching. Walking is not only good exercise but is a way to lotimately eojoy a city, and it is especially suited to the woman on her own. Museums, churches, palaces, art galleries welcome her. She excites no comment as she strides along. She may even meet nice people.

Another of my favorite recreations on weekends is to take brief boot trips: tripe: the farry from Copenhagen to Malmo, Sweden, for example; the canal boats of Amsterdam, the ferries oo the Alster River in Hamburg, the ferry from Istanbul across the Bosporus to Asia, the bateaux mouche that tour tha Seine from the Pont d'Iena in Paris. And you are in a public place, surrounded by people-safe.

If the woman traveling alone fancies concerts or theater, the hotel concierga is her best friend. He will hire cars, give directions and be generally helpful. He can also get tickets to sold-out events, and for a good reason. The concierges buy up all the tickets so they can re-sell them at a profit. They expect to be nicely tipped for their services.

For that matter, I've found it helpful to make friends with all the functionaries in the good hotals, For example, the bartender in the tioy little bar tucked away at the back of the lobby of the palatial Danieli in Vanice introduced me to a couple seated at the bar They became and have remained my close friends. The bartender knew me from several previous trips and figured we would like each other. He was right.

There have been occasions when I have been treated as a second-class citizen. I am given a room overlooking the garbage pails or seated next to the toilet in the restaurant. I have learned to insist on my rights in a pleasant, quiet, firm manner. Amiability can halp. Also a determination not to give in.

On a business trip to Moscow, I found myself in a room at the back of the National Hotel overlooking a blank wall. It was so small I bad to turn sideways to get past the bed. I went to the desk. The Russiao woman clerk was being berated by an American woman who was yelling that even the worst motel in the good old U.S. of A. could supply a bed board but not this big famous hotel in Moscow. It was obvious that the Russian didn't eveo know what a bed board was.

When the screamer departed I apologized for my compatriot. Then I asked in a pleasant manner if it would be possible to move me to a better room, preferably overlooking the Kremlin. The woman twinkled at me, handed me a key and suggested I take a look and see if I liked this room better. It turned out to be a corner suite with balcony overlooking the Kremlin, it had been occupied by Lenin, Adlai Stevenson, Eleanor Roosevelt, Sol Hurok and many another dignitary-not all at the same time, of course. The price for me was the same as that broom closer. Amiability paid

However, in sticking up for my rights, I am prepared to get tough if necessary. I never use the belpless little woman ect. I have trouble looking helpless-and anyway it doesn't work. I remember being giveo a tiny room overlooking the trolley tracks at my favorite hotel in Milan, the Principe e Savoia. When I complained, I was told sorry, the hotel was full. With the greatest dignity, I asked to speak to the manager at once, Implacability was written oo my face. The reception wondering whether I was some celebrity he had failed to recognize. 'That will oot be oecessary, Madame," be said, and suddenly a better room materialized, complete with parquet floors, fine rugs and marble fittings.

I have more or less solved the problem of getting a decent table io a restaurant. First, I select the restaurant cither from a guidebook or from tha "What's to See and Do" magazines to be found io botel rooms in most countries. My own personal preference when alone is to have music with dioner. Thus, in Oslo for instance, 1 choose the Queens, a restaurant on a spit of land surrounded by the fjord. Excellent views in all directions, gracious (if expensive) dining, a large dance floor and a fine dance band, generally from some 'Tron Curtain' country like Poland or Czechoslovakia-they play terrific rock 'o' roll.

Then I phone for a reservation and say, "I am calling to make a reservation for Dr. Miles." I happen to have a Ph.D. but I would say this even if I didn't. Assumption by person at other end: This is the secretary calling for her male employer. I theo specify where Dr. Miles would like to sit—near the stage if there is entertainment, next to a window, in a quiet cornar or whatevar. When I arrive, the mastre d' is usually surprised to find that Dr. Miles is a woman. But the good table has already been reserved. Packing is a ouisance. It is especially difficult if you need daytime clothes and dressy clothes and sport clothes. I have some tricks to make the whole thing easier. They apply to vacation packing too, with or without husband and family.

I decide how many times I can appear in the same thing. For example, if I am going to visit three offices. spendiog three days in each, I can wear the same clothing in each office because the people are different. Thus I carefully pack for one office and wear this set of clothing three times. Add some informal things for travel days and weekends and, voila, packed for a two-week trip! On a four-week vacation, I figure out what I will need for one week, taking account of various types of activities. I pack this and wear each thing four times. Aside from some personal items, no laundry need be done and there is no drip-dry mess hanging in the shower.

I travel light, preferably with a bag I can carry myself. I favor neither the soft-sided oor rigid-sided bags, but rather the leather or vinyl types that are most impervious to airline damage, preferably with a combination lock set to my birthday, the only oumber I'm apt to remember. And with a big red bow tied around the handle to make spotting the bag easier.

I roll everything instead of folding. Instead of layers of folded items to grope through, there are oest rolls which can be easily extracted, take up less space and, oddly enough, come out no more wrinkled than folded

I have developed a reminder list over the years of items apt to be forgotten. I review this for each trip, in terms each her own list. Mine includes such items as sunglasses, driving glasses, bubble bath, binoculars, fever thermometer (if I get sick, I want to know io Fahrenheit), alarm clock, flashlight, current cooverter, acti-bug juice, pretyped pressure-sensitive mailing labels for postcards, extra changa purse for foreign coins, transistor radio, whisk broom, pants banger, sewing kit, ball of twine, Band-Aids, shoe cloth, Swiss Army knife, Goddard's dry cleaner, toilet paper and soap. But more important than bubble bath, sewing kit and Band-Aids-bring your courage.

People return to Paradise Beach Resort for the smiles, food, and Barbados beach. But mostly for the smiles.

hey say Barbados is 21 miles long and a smile wide. But Paradise Beach is easily the widest smile of all.

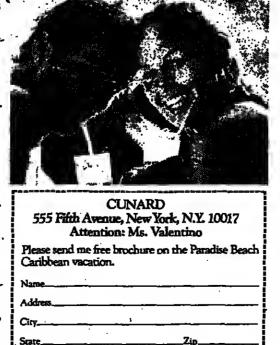

Sure, people come back for the 4 Har-Tru® tennis courts, the 2-level pool, the nightly entertainment and the informal atmosphere (which is everywhere, from dance floor to deluxe oceanfront rooms). But we did a little survey. And guess what? Mostly people come back for the smiles.

that gives you some choice. The Air-India 8-day London Theatre Tour.

We give you four theatre tickets. Three tickets to any plays you want to see. If the play's running and if there are tickets available, you've got it. (Only exceptions: no opera, ballet or Royal Shakespeare Company.)

The fourth ticket is to a performance at the exciting new National Theatre. And a guided tour is included.

How does all this stack up to other airlines' theatre tours? Well, some of them don't give you as many tickets. And some of them don't give you as much choice. In fact, some of them don't give you any choice at all.

An Air-India 8-day London Theatre Tour also gives you a great flight round-trip, 7 nights in a good hotel with private bath, and an Avis car for three days.

We do all this for the same –or perhaps less –than the airlines that don't give you so much choice. Which makes the whole thing an easy choice, right?

The original town plan made real the founders' conception of an orderly apiritual acciety. Arranged around the open town square were various communal buildings; the church, hoys and girls schools, widows and widowers bouses and aingle and widowers bouses and aingle brothers and single sisters houses. Married settlers built family homes near the square in a tight grid pattern. By the mid-19th century Salem had ceased to function as a congregation town as urban growth enveloped the original settlement. Today, however, more tlement. Today, however, more than 30 of its huildings (most of which are still private residences and shops) have been restored or and shops) have been restored or reconstructed by a nonprofit corporation to form a bistoric district. A visit should begin at the modern visitor's center on Old Salem Road, where a walking-tour map is available. At the half-timbered and brick Single Brothers House, costumed guides explain the town's early history.

Boys moved to the houae at 14 years of age to apprentice to a master craitsman and remained master craitsman and remained there until they married. Several dormitory rooms have heen converted into erafts areas. There are demonstrations by a tinsmith (a teapot hangs over his door), a weaver, a gonsmith and a joiner (cabinetmaker, furniture maker and finishing carpenter in one). The tiny weatherboarded Miksch Tobacco Shop was the first privately owned house in Salem. Matthew Miksch lived there in the 1770's with his family, using the front room for a shop and storing and processing tobacco in the log outhuilding at the rear. TOBACCO-After the Civil War, Union soldiers took home more than Confederate sabers. They brought back an insatiable taste for the sweet, light yellow Bright tobacco of the Piadmout. Washing-ron Duke, a penniless ex-Confed-erate soldisr, started selling leaf tobacco in Durham in 1865. Later, by introdocing a mechanical cigarette-rolling machine and promot ing cigarettes aggressively (a celebrity's picture in every packags), Duke and his sons huilt the giant American Tobacco Company. The home-atead and tobacco works are at 2828 Duke Homestead Road, With the introduction of mechanization to the tobacco industry, young women who rolled four cigarstres a minute were replaced by noisy machinea that churned out 200 in the same 60 accords. Today each of the 140 machines at the R. J. Reynolds Whitaker Park Plant in Winston-Salem manufactures and Winston-Salem mannactures and inspects 4,000 cigarettes a minute. A free tour (leaving virtually continuously from 8 A.M. to 10 P.M. waekdays) lasts 45 minute. 10 P.M. waekdays) lasts 45 minotes. A complimentary pack of cigaretres, pipe or chewing tobacco is offered to all adults. Whitaker Park is on Reynolds Boulevard, off Cherry Street, two and one-half miles north of downtown. Similar tours are available at the American Tobacco Company (9 A.M. to 2:30 P.M. weekdays) at the corner of Pettigrew and Blackwell Streets in Durham, and ac Liggett & Myers, Inc. (8 A.M. to 11:30 A.M. and 12:30 P.M. to 3 P.M. weekdays) on West Main Street in Durham.

DINING-Piedmont restaurants lean to steak, prime ribs, lobster tails and all-you-can-eat salad bars. An exception is the Seth Jones 1847 Restaurant (on U.S. 401 sevan miles north of downtown Rzleigh), which offers a five-course prix fixe dinner that inclodes home-made pâté, escargots and roast duckling in port wine sauce with peaches and currants or sentéed calves liver with capers and avocado. Yso'll dine elegantly in this simple white-porticoed 1847 farmhouse. The waiters sre in formal dress, the wine steward wears a green frock coat, and patrons ara served in seven small dining rooms, each with chandelier, candlelit tables and sriginal wood paneling. Dinner only ($12.50) is available from 6:30 to 9:30 nightly except Monday. The wine list is extensive, ranging from a French Beaujolaia for $7.50 ts a rare red Bordeaux Chateau Margaux '59 fsr $250. Reservations are required (919-876-4700). The Oide House Restaurant at 2401 Chapel Hill Rsad in Durham bas a charm similar to the Seth Jones hut a less distinguished cusine. Meals are à la carte. Luncheon entreearun from $1.93 to $3.95, while the charge at dinner for the same fare rises to $6.75 to $12.50. I particularly enjoyed the "Serhiam fish," a red snapper baked with potatoes, green peppers, tomatoes and sour eream. Open daily; lunch from a red snapper baked with potatoes, green peppers, tomatoes and sour eream. Open daily; lunch from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M., dinner from 5 to midnight. Between 4 and 5 P.M. tea and homemade scoues with jam are offered for $1.50. Reservations (919-489-6613) are recommended wheo Duke University is in session. Hearty German meals are the specialty for lunch sity is in aession. Hearty German meals are the specialty for lunch (cotrees, $2.25 to $3.45) and dinner ($2.95 to $8.73) at the Salem Tavern Dioing Rooms in Winston-Salem. As a main course try the Geflugelpastete, a tasty chicken pie with a thick crust ($3.45), hut leave room for the hot apple walnut cobbler ($1.23). Lunch is aerved from 11 A.M. to 2 P.M., seven days a week, dinner from 6 to 9 P.M. Tuesday through Saturday. The Salem Tavern Dining Rooms is in a restored red-brick building at 736 South Main Street in Old Salem. Reservations are not required but he vations are not required but he prepared for a short wait at times when Old Salem homes are open to visitors. Incidentally, only beer and wine are add in North Caro-lina restaurants. If you want something stronger, you'll have to bring it along.

LODGING—Piedmont cities bave their shara of the major chain motels grouped along access highways and scattered through downtown areas. Outstanding among them is tha Winston-Salem Hyatt House (600-228-9000) with an imaginative indoor atrium, Glassenclosed halconles sutround the enclosed balconles sutround the courtyard, which is filled with trees, gatdens, shops and aidewalk cafes, Rooms arc $23 to $26 for singles, $29 to $36 for doobles. The Hyatt House is at 300 West. Fifth Street. While the Pinehurst Hotel (800-334-9560) has the most lavish accommodations in the sandbills region, the Charlton Motel (800-323-0240 or 919-692-2232) in Southern Pines ia an excellent choice for visitors not intent on playing Pinehurst's golf courses. The back rooms overlook a small picture-book lake, and the architect left the pine trees in place, even though they are in the middle of the parking lot. Singles start at $12. doubles at $16. The motel can book golf starting times at various country clubs. A traditional atmosphere distinguishes Chapel Hill's red-brick, whiteporticoed Carolina Inn, owned by the University of North Carolina and situated on the campus. Rooma ($11 to $20 aingle, $16 to $25 double) are small and unpretentious. Reservations: 919-933-2001.

LATOC

The Caribbean vacation that begins with a private limousine at your door

And that's just the beginning. The people who created Sandy Lane have done it again. They out did themselves in creating La Toc, the 100 acre huxury resort on undiscovered St. Lucia.

Your first taste of La Toc style begins at your own doorstep (if you live within 50 miles of IFK) as the chauffeur hands you into your private limousine for the ride to the airport. That should give you an idea of what to expect from La Toc.

You'll swim in a pool so large, it has its ewn island. Or laze on half a mile of crescent beach. There's a private 9-hole golf course fighted tennis courts. A British-trained staff. A Courtnental kitchen. And nightly entertainment

One week, $730 to $760, including round trip air fare on direct BWIA flights, limousine to and from JFK, transfers in St. Lucia, balconied. room with ocean view and all breakfasts and dinners at La Toc. Private villas, $630 to $660 (meaks extra). Rates per person, double occupancy, plantaxes and service charges. Superior and decommodations available at an extra charges. Longer stays available.

Early reservations essential. See your fravel agent. Or call Ms. Valentino at (212) 983-2850. Or mail the coupon below for brochure.

Our first destination was Echtarnach. Any sightseeing tour of provincial Luxembourg, I am told, should include . Echternach, Vianden and Clervaux. We jeft the car in the marketplaca, near the statue and turreted towo hall and, fter exploring some narrow streets and ancient ramparts on foot, entered he vast courtyard of a Benedictine bbey founded in 698 by St. Willibrord rom Northumberland, who Christianred the Low Countries, including Lux-: mbourg. Beyond it was a formal park ith an exquisite Louis XV pavilion estling between a red carpat of owers and a backdrop of green hills. s we strolled farther. I suddenly ught sight of modern housing with ini-balconias and Georges said; hat's already Germany. In between the River Sore, which is the bound-

> : We doubled back toward tha Middle es and beyond. The abbey is the id's most important religious build-: 12 with 12th-century frescoes and a - reentury crypt housing a dazng white marble sarcophagus and nains of St. Willibrord, As we ened the ancient edifice and, in all her idstone splendor, its basilica, orges told me that I really should e come to Echternach a few weeks

Every spring, on Whit Tuesday from M. to 1 P.M., there is a dancing ession here," he explained. "Five in thousand dancers and musiciaos through the town and the ica. They are all linked, not by 's but by handkerchiefs. They .. e and writhe to the same primialmost sinister, melody played and over until it rings in your for days thereafter, Some 20,000 ie come to watch, for while it's ally a religious procession honort. Willibrord, it looks more like __ pagan ritual with the dancers complately under the spell of the

The event goes back to the Crusades. One Cuy of Echternach went off to war with his wife and cama back without har, saying she died along tha way. Tha townspeopla accused him of killiog her, though they never found her body. Just before he was to be executed in the markatplace, he was offarad a chanca to say soma last words. Ha asked for a violin and began to play the haunting melody. The people couldn't resist it and, as they all danced and swayed, othar musicians pickad it up and, in all that frenzy, Guy of Echternach tiptued away and was never haard from again.

Aftar an hour and a half in Echiernach, we went for a driva through the surrounding region, including a leisurely spin through a campsite on the grounds of a palace in Mertert. At the Bernard-Massard champagna-makers' callars io Grevanmacher-sur-Moselle, the guided tour (70 cents per adult. 45 cents for Erika) was more enlightening than most axcuses for wine sampling. First wa sat through a slida presentation in English (also available in German, French and Dutch) that started out with Dom Perignon worrying his beads. Next an English-spanking guide showed the threa of us through the caves and delivered us to a tasting room where the host popped open a bottle of Brut Cuvée Réservée and laft it at our table, Georges and I downed it all (the retail value would bave been $4.25) whila Erika experimented with fresh grape juices, white and red. Tha daily tours are availabla at half-hour intarvals from 9 to 11:30 A.M. and 2 to 5:30 P.M.

Fourteen miles from Luxembourg city, in tha town of Ehnen, two fine rastaurants in small hotels stand side by side. Simmer of Ehnen is one of the nation's seven Michelin one-star restaurants (Hiertz in Diekirch Is the only two-starrer) and is the place to order an expensive lobster and perhaps even ogle royalty at the next table. But Georges had reserved a table with a river view at the relatively bourgeois Bamberg next door-the place to sample a Luxembourg specialty called friture: small whitefish deep fried in hot oil and then spiced in an inimitable way that hardly anybody attempts to duplicate at home. A portion of about a dozen costs $5,50 at the Bamberg. (One warning: Elsewhere in Luxembourg, particularly inland, the "friture" advertised at little roadside stands means french fries.)

lesson in dissection friture: "Half the bones are edibla and half can be fatal. You peel away the back fins and some of the lower fins, Then you bite into the crisp stomach, which will loose up tha fish amough for you to take it by the tip and pry spart the two halvas so that the flesh comes away from the bones." If Georges is not at the next table, the innkeeper, Madame Bamberg, assured me, she will give any customer the same lesson. I generally insist upon feeling secure whan eating, so it's my ultimate tribute to friture when t tell you it's worth the risk. I embellished the fritura and Moselle wine with the house aperitif, kir, which is cassis and dry white wine with a strawberry in it (the drink is named aftar a fighting priast of World War II), and the first raspberries of tha season.

Driviog us back to the Hotel Aerogolf after dinner, Georges detoured into Luxembourg city and look us to the capital's main Saturday night event: the brass band coocert on the Place d'Armes. On a fluorescent-lit bandstand surrounded by sidewalk cafes (including a Wimpy's), the musicians played a couple of marches and then a creditable "Stardust," but Erika and I were too tired to linger long.

On Sunday morning, right after our continental breakfast at the Aerogolf, we set out with Georges for northern Luxambourg. As wa passed through a quaint old markat town in a narrow rocky valley. Georges told us:

"This is Larochette-Little Rock Do you see the Grand Hotel de la Poste? George Patton slept here-for a few days. Luxembourg was liberated twice in 1944; the second time was with the Battle of the Bulge in the Ardennes, We'll be spending much of today in the Ardennes, which is a forest and mountain range that spans four countries: Luxembourg, France, Belgium and Germany, Because of tha thousands of Third Army soldiers who died to liberate us, Luxembourg is probably the least anti-American country you'll ever visit in Europe."

Our first stop in the Ardennes was "game park" at Hosingen ($1.25 for adults. 75 cents for Erika), which involved a lot of walking to see just a few deer, goats and wild boars. Then we drove to Clervaux, first glimpsed from the lookout point at the Cafe Belle Vue. We saw an orange-roofed Benedictine abbey directly across a ravine and, down in the valley below, the town with its turreted feudal castle dating to 1132. The castle features three permanent exhibitions: "The Family of Man" photo anthology, Toor location: the stately Hotel Koenar, with large dining rooms, much bowing and scraping (by imported waiters) and irritatingly slow service. deep in the shade of Clervaux's ravine with the River Clerve bubbling swiftly past. Dabbling in regional specialties, Erika and I enjoyed sharing a platter of smoky Ardennes ham ($4.50) and a dozen small frogs' legs ($7) that wera both garlicky and delicate, but also booler and less rewarding than the previous night's friture.

Aftar lunch, we pushed on to the rugged, almost vartical, ninth-century town of Vianden, with its castle rising out of rock and towering toward heaven with a majesty that its model in Clervaux hadn't hintad at. The landscape of Vianden can be viawed in the summer from a chairlift going to a height of almost 1,500 feet, Down balow, along tha River Our, is the little house where Victor Hugo once lived In exile (open daily through December, except Wednesdays, 9:30 A.M. to noon and 2 to 6 P.M.; 50 cents for adults, half for children). Nearby is Europe's most powerful hydroelectric pumping station, which has a visitor's gallery open free of charge from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. daily.

On our way back to Luxembourg city from Vlanden, we stopped in the little commercial town of Ettelbruck to look at a monument to Gen, George S. Patton Jr. As we drove into Ettelbruck, I was amazed to see American G.L's strolling hand-in-hand with what looked like the prettlest local women. Before I could ask how long 1945 had lasted, Georges told us: 'Today, there was a Remembraoce Day honoring the American liberation, so the United States Army came over from Germany to participate. If wa'd reachad hera by 4 o'clock, you'd have seen tha American Ambassador and the Grand Duke of Luxembourg, We're a parliamentary mooarchy. No ruler has used tha vato in more than 40 yaars. Tha Grand Duke Jean lives oot far from Ettelbruck-in a secluded palace in Colmar-Berg-and, while he's not one of those democratic Scandinavian monarchs who miogles with the people, he makes quita a faw ceremonial appearances."

Georges had to put in a ceremonial appearance at work the next day, so we said goodbye on Suoday night.

Tha oext morning, Erika and I used our Icelandic vouchars for the twoand-a-half-hour city tour of Luxembourg, a $4.25 valua if bought à la carta. Our guide was a Danish woman who spoke excellent English. She also offared to speak in French or German, but 20 of tha two dozen sightseers ware Amaricans and the other four (Dutch and Japaoese) were bappy to settle for English, too. The bus brought us to a boulevard of palaces that turnad out to be banks. Wa want past viaducts and sandstona walls and monuments and ruins as well as three tiny Ministries sitting side-by-side. befitting a tiny, consolidated nation whose Prime Minister-Foreign Ministar Gastoo Thorn waars several hats at home and wields remarkable influence abroad. Luxembourg is the seat of some European Common Market institutioos and tha Common Market complexes are of the same kind of steeland-glass variety that's spoiling Paris nowadays, "The Common Markat employs mora than 6,500 peopla here," our guide said. "While its seat is in Brussels, its heart is io Luxembourg."

Thrice we descended from the bus. We had a five-minute stop at tha Fort of Three Acorns, built io 1688, one of 24 fortifications surrounding the old city and now more park than protection. We spent 20 minutes at the American Cemetery, where 5,100 American soldiers are still burled (there used to be 10,000, but half were sbippad home at family request) and plain white cross at the head of his troops marks the grave of General Patton. We stood for five minutes on a viaduct getting a fioal glimpse of the city in the vallay below.

When the sightseeing bus delivered us back to the Hotel Aerogolf shortly before noon, there was just enough time to check out and ride the hotel's minibus over to the airport for our Icelandic flight's check-in and seat selectioo. By then, my question about whether Luxembourg justified 48 hours of a tourist's tima had loog since been answered: All signals were GO.

Atlantic City Off Season

degree panorama extending 60 miles or more greets the passengers," we were told. Below us, as we rushed upward, Atlantic City very suddenly widened and turned until we could see all the city spread out beside a level ocean incomparably large with minuscule waves ruffling its edge.

As the Space Needle cabin ascended, Martin attempted conversation with a teen-age boy, our pilot, who lounged on the leatherette seat looking depressed and shot us a glance of unstudied indifference. Martin was desperate. He is afraid to stand on a ladder. "High enough for you?" he dow, bored, sullen with disappointment, longing for his distant future and also the evening. Far below, as we plummeted, we saw the speck which was Edward, who wouldn't touch this change of perspective with

Back on the ground, dizzily strolling. In the window belonging to Mmes. Vivian and Elaine, phrenologists, The a man's profile which looked like Richard was placidly gazing ahead, memory above his eyebrows, awe and rationality nestled behind his ear, avarice at the nape of the neck.

Down the way, for 95 cents each, SueAnne and I submitted to electrographic personality analyses. You sign your name for the electrographic analysis programmer behind the counter: four impressively whirring machines comment on your personality within a minute and a half. For the first minute or so the machine seems to do nothing-probably, like analysts through the years, thinking you over. Then there is a sudden hum and flutter and a card pops out. The cierk regarded my card with elaborate interest. "This's your good side, this's your bad side," he said, pointing to two lists of adjectives. On my good side I am affable, reliable, sincere, disciplined, artistic, attractive to opposite sex and migratory. I do not love luxury nor am I interested in reading. Far from being well adjusted mentally (my bad side now), I enjoy Heing alone sometimes, am sentimental and responsive, have an overdeveloped imagination. I show no leadership ability. All things considered, it is unsurprising that I am inclined to be despondent. SueAnne was reasonably satisfied with her card, but I felt mine

We strolled on Salt spray drifted in from the sea. Our heads were stuffed with Atlantic City phenomena, the bizarre juxtapositions of the boardwalk at its best. We had already ambled through Reese Palley, Merchant to the Rich, imagining ourselves making large purchases of china and glass. Now we passed the empty frames of cabanas lined up row after row waiting for summer. Signs clamored for our attention, offering us Comic Fotos, rococo porcelain figurines, Burlesk and a reward: "See her change from Girl Gorillal $10,000 if not ALIVE!" It possible to buy a narmonica, now 88 cents, formerly $2.50, which says Atlantic City, N.J., and is shaped like

As we walked we were reminded that Atlantic City is a city of tradition. One local tradition still flourishing is the window demo, where people stand in a window pretending that they're not in a window, carving fudge or bagging peanuts and cashews, while the rest of us stand in clumps outside and watch through the glass. There is still salt water taffy, too, twisting in glutinous ropes on taffy-pulling machines at Trapicians Original. And the auctions go on and on. At Berkeley's Galleries, a few people occupied folding chairs and watched a man run through his pitch while two sidekicks disconsolately paced the room, eyeing the door. Edward and I opened the door slightly, causing one of the men to rush toward us through the chair backs and close the door on our feet.

"The morning was glittery and clear. People on the beach tossed a ball. A slow jogger. A biker. Strollers in overcoats. In the stillness and sunlight, we reaffirmed something important about off-season Atlantic City: It's still there."

"Not while the sale!" he hissed. He meant, I think, that we might break the concentration of those already in the folding chairs, in thrall to the main hawker and about to buy. He tossed our leisure wear a disgusted

At the shop down the way, you can have your portrait drawn by Louis Levine: profile, $3.50, full view, $5.95; color costs more. Louis Levine was sitting on a folding chair in the sun and spoke to us gently. "You couldn't find a better time," he said. 'It's just that I don't want my picture painted," Edward replied. "I know how you feel," said Louis

We returned to our hotel, the Mariborough-Blenheim entering an arcade, several halls and then a long windowed corridor lined with chairs and ashtrays where conventioneers milled. The Mariborcugh-Blenheim seems to cover several city blocks, a triumph of mammethness. The lobby is full of fire laces and columns with wildly ornate capitals and a three-tiered goldcolored chandelier with electric candles in the shape of an upside-down fountain "I'll be getting rid of about 900 today," said the room clerk, with imwarranted equanimity. The off-season rates from October to June are $25. te $40 double.

We toured the facilities. The bar is a darkened velvet box, blood-red and shadowy, with black tufted chairs and a chandelier made of some 60 white globes. The first floor is a maze of enormous rooms-one has 17 Oriental carpets underfoot and a pink forest of columns that rose around us like Sequoias. No other people anywhere. The gently steaming swimming pool under its bubble is entered through an inelegant flap. The game room is a home for billiard tables, calm and interior, the still center of a palace of gigantism, glowing with a green glow.

The 900 the clerk was unloading were Charismatic Catholics, leaving to be replaced by a group that appeared rich io feisty old men in dark suits: The Veteran Boxers' Association. According to a laughing and serene woman in the elevator, 17,000 Charismatic Catholics had met in Atlantic City during the weekend. Now some of them were massed in the antercom below the lobby for a final song. "We love Jesus, our Redeemer," they sang, arms around each other, swaying in sweet camaraderie. "He's our Daddy," they sang, sitting on suitcases; and their song swelled and floated up to us as we picked up our room keys. We passed a tiny man who was balanced on a loveseat leaning toward his companion, another old man addressing him in a sharp voice presenting opinions with aggressive enthusiasm. The footwork of Allf The timing! He poked his friend as the chest. We trudged miles to our rep through empty engless corriders thro ing irritable, isolated members 30% in Cruise the South Seas on ships as friendly and warm as Polynesia.

No other vacation can match the splendor of a South Seas cruise with the friendly Americans, the SS Mariposa or SS Monterey, And no other cruise can rival the incomparable service and friendly spirit found only aboard these two proud ships of the U.S. Registry.

The ships. The SS Mariposa and SS Monterey were specifically designed for Pacific cruising. They're large enough to have everything luxury liners should have yet small enough (with just 330 passengers) to offer a cordial, intimate atmosphere.

Isn't that the way you'd like to see the South Seas?

The service. With a crew member for almost every passenger, we have time to pamper you in our famous grand manner. First initiated by sister ships over 90 years ago, it's a way of life that has become the hallmark of luxury cruising in the Pacific.

The spirit. It's our famous Aloha Spiritas friendly and warm as the people you'll meet Down Under. It's this spirit of hometown hospitality that really sets our cruises apart.

In 43 days round-trip from San Francisco or Los Angeles you'll cruise 15,000 miles . of peaceful Pacific. And experience all the enchantment of the fabled South Seas. Or you can board in Honolulu for a 31-day round-trip, with sailings Jan. 8 and Feb. 14. *49-day cruise March 13. We also have a special longer cruise with an alternate 14-port itinerary that includes Tasmania and TRAMPTRI both the South and North Islands of New Zealand. It's 49 days roundtrip from California, or 38 days from Honolulu departing Mar. 19. Whichever you choose, now is the time to make that South Seas dream come true. Butter Miles

M. F. P.

It was the kind of household auction most people claim stopped happening sometime in the late 1950's, when Vermont went more or less public. It was the kind of auction my wife, Nancy, and I had been seeking for years. It was an anction that had all the elements going for it.

Element: The auction was to be held in the village of Brookfield which, though almost self-consciously picturesque, isn't on the way to anywhere. The streets are unpaved and the tourists are few. The population of about 600 people is scattered over 26,000 acres in the kind of random ruralization that makes places like Brookfield-which is about 18 miles south of Montpeliergraceful and rare.

Element: The auctioo was to be held in front of the Town Hall, but by midafternoon rain drove the determined buyers inside the tiny building as it drove the merely curious away.

Element: The auctioneer, a youngish fellow with a brusque manner and a limited amount of lexical charm, seemed interested in being anywhere but inside the Brookfield Town Hall. His presentation of items and acceptance of bids was decidedly brisk.

Element: The auction had been advertised only locally-Nancy and I read about it in the Montpelier newspaper on the previous Thursday-and the advertisement seemed almost determined to generate disinterest. Most auctions in Vermont are held on Saturdays and Sundays throughout the year and advertised on the previous Thursday. The ads are usually hucksters in print, listing the consignment in a clever shuffle of the ordinary and the exciting, often capitalizing the latter for emphasis: "To be sold to the highest bidder, household goods, railroad lanterns, FOUR ANTIQUE LADDER BACK CHAIRS in nearly mint condition, a seldom-used Kelvinator dishwasher, numerous cups and saucers including a MUSTACHE CUP, two banjo-type hanging clocks . . ." Et cetera. All auction announcements, as if by state edict, end with the words ". . . and other items too numerous to mention." The Brookfield advertisement practically started that way.

And so all the elements were assembled to create the perfect household auction. We were about to be rewarded for all those countless miles we'd driven throughout northern New England, only to find estates being sold to Down Country professionals or to the idle rich. We were being compensated for the hours we had spent sitting in our portable canvas chairs watching handirons go for $8 apiece and china antique dolls going for $800. Finally, here in BRIAN VACHON is the editor of Ver-

I parked the car and knew immediate--by the absence of out-of-state license plates, U-Haul vans and many other cars-that we were in for something special. Ducking under my raincoat. Nancy and I darted across the muddy Main Street and stepped inside the hall. There were not more than 30 people surrounding the auctioneer and they were the kind of people we like to see at auctions. Good country people. Vermonters. Good bargainers. good money managers, plain folks.

We studied the consignment. It was obvious that a good portion of the estate had already been sold, and we cursed our Saturday morning dalliance. Pieces of furniture were stacked out on the porch or off to the side of the room with the new owners' labels on them. But there were plenty of items left and a feeling in the room that was cozily cheerful and contagious.

It took us only minutes to catch the tenor of the auctioneer's pace and our contentment turned to jubilance. I turned to Nancy and grinned at her blissfully. "This is it," I said, "This

WHO SAYS LONDON IS ONLY FOR THE RICH? NOW THERE'S A LAKER ROUNDTRIP FOR JUST $269. -Freddie Laker

This November, Laker Airways flies roundtrip to London for just $269. Repeat. $269.

And that includes a big, roomy seat on one of Freddie's wide-bodied DC-10's, good hot meals with wine, cocktails, stereo music and a feature motion picture. The works.

All you do is buy your ticket 65 days ahead, and plan to stay at least 10 days. As if that weren't enough, Laker and Overseas Charter-a-Flight have put together a great winter vacation package:

Our great London Superweek, which gives you eight nights in a London hotel, continental breakfasts every morning, a London theatre hit, all taxes and tips, twelve two-for-the-price of-one dinners at fashionable London restaurants, a London sightseeing tour, transportation to and from the airport in a luxury coach, six free cocktails, discounts in fifty London shops, and reduced admission to three London discotheques—all for just $339.

For this incredible week, just buy your ficket 35 days ahead. So see your travel agent right away. Before all the rich people hear about Freddie Laker's London.

(Note. This $269 minimum airfare is for a full flight and already includes a $70 service charge. If all seats aren't sold, the price may be increased up to 20%, to a maximum $322.80, never any higher. But that's rare, and still lots less than flying so-called "regufar economy." If the price increased more than that, the flight is cancelled at least 45 days before takeoff, and you get a full

> Pan Am flies direct to more cities in the world from the U.S. than any other airline.

> And since Europe is a large part of the world, we also fly to more of its cities than any other U.S. airline.

> And all our flights to Europe leave from Pan Am's Worldport™terminal at JFK.

We leave for London every day at 10:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m. On 747s.

We leave for Frankfurt every day at 6:00 p.m., 7:00 p.m., and 7:45 p.m. On 747s.

We leave for Rome every day at 8:15 p.m. On a 747. For Munich every day at 6:00 p.m. On a 747.

And for Brussels, Amsterdam, Copenhagen, and the rest of Europe we leave several times a week.

On many of our 747s we offer first class passengers a chance to dine in our upper-deck dining room. At a table like you would in a fine restaurant. And like in a fine restaurant, we ask that you make a reservation. (You can make it when you make your flight reservation.)

And we have a lot of fares to choose from.

Besides first class and regular economy fares, we offer 14/21-day fares, 22/45-day fares, and 22/45-day Budget Fares.

Budget Fares can save you about 50% over regular round trip economy fares. (Because these fares are so low, there are various restrictions and conditions which your travel agent can explain more easily than we can here.)

The result of all those fares? Well, if you're vacationing on a tight budget we can help loosen your belt a little.

going to throw in this vase. Now you take 'em all as .is, but this whole lot could be pewter. Who's got a dollar for the vase, the pretty little plates and the serving dish?"

"Fifty cents!" someone shouted behind me. "One dollar!" I countered, making my first public pronouncement of the "I got a dollar, who's going to give me two?" the auctioneer asked. "Two anywhere? Two? "Sold to this fellow for one dollar

I paid the young man who handed us our purchase, and we inspected our lot. The plates were a little grimy and the serving dish did show the signs of years of use. The vase was bent and old-looking-very old-looking.

Each piece was marked "Pewter, made in Sheffield, England." "I don't believe this," Nancy said. "Those would have gone for $10 apiece anywhere else. Can you believe this?"

"Okay, now we've still got a nice four-poster to sell, folks, so don't anybody go away." Three of the auctioneer's helpers brought the bed out for public display. It wasn't really a four-poster, but it was a handsome piece of furniture. The headboard was scrolled delicately with turned posts or "caonon balls" oo each eod. The side and foot-boards were spare and elegant. "Who's going to start out on this fine old four-poster for $10?" the auctioneer asked. It was the most ridiculous price of the afternoon and hands shot up all over the room, including my own. "Oh, now we got a little action," the auctioneer said. "Who'll go 20?" Fewer hands, mine not among them. "Twenty-five?" One hand, belonging to a woman standing by the far wall, a woman who had been keeping what seemed to be careful ootes on every item sold and who had made a number of purchases herself.

"Sold for $25," the auctioneer said with the abruptness of a falling ax. "Wait, I'll give $30," another woman shouted. She had been standing near us, leaning against a wall, but we hadn't noticed her before. She hadn't spoken before. "I'll buy the bed back for 30," she said, and the shout turned into a soh. "Thirty, please?"

The auctioneer acted as if he hadn't heard the hid, and for a moment I thought he hadn't. In the next moment, a jarring and terrible moment, I realized what was happening. So did Nancy. I forced myself to look over at the woman. She was fiftyish, I guessed. huddled in a gray housecoat, leaning uneasily against the wall, looking at the auction with red, wet eyes. "I would have bought the bed back for 30," she said to no one in particular. And no one seemed to near her.

The owner of the consignment of goods which was being auctioned off was among us. She was one of the 30 people in the little Town Hall, and those were her sheets and blankets and lamps and pewter plates and antique beds and items too numerous to mention which were heing, just barely, sold. She was there to watch it happen. Suddenly, for us, the perfect auction had dissolved into something

"Let's keep it going, folks," the auc-tioneer said. "We've got some more mirrors here. One's got a little crack in it but the others are pretty nice. What'll ya give me for the lot of Silence. Now, for us, it was a sickening sound.

"I really wanted the bed back for 30. I would have paid 30 just to get it back," the woman said. Her speech was slurred and the hands clutching the housecoat were shaking unmercifully. A young man with a pony tail came over to the woman and asked if he could help her. She shook her head to say no. The young man asked if she'd like to be taken home. Again

"Okay, look at this piece here," the auctioneer said. "I don't know what to call it. A chafing dish, did somebody say? Okay, it's a chafing dish. Who's going to give me a dollar on this chafing dish? It looks like it might be pretty old." It was very old and trimmed in copper and bronze. It was a magnificent piece that needed a little cleaning. "A dollar," someone shouted. "Two!" I shouted before the auction eer gave the piece away. Nancy looked at me in astonishment. "I got two," the auctiooeer said.

Three anywhere? Three? Sold to this fellow for $2." The woman walked over toward us as I handed one of the boys two dollar

"The owner was among us. They were her beds, lamps and plates. Suddenly the perfect auction had disolved into something ugly."

"Okay, I'm going to throw these bills, "You made a good buy," she two smaller mirrors in with this mahogany one," the auctioneer said. "Who's got $2 for the lot?"

On the face of it, nothing about Brookfield, its Town Hall or the auction that was going on inside had changed. But our perfect auction had become a nightmare. An atmosphere that had seemed cozily cheerful now seemed clubby, vindictive, vengeful. The shrewd bidders surrounding us now seemed vulturous, I asked Nancy if she wanted to leave. "I do and I don't," she said.

said to me evenly. "Did you get the pewter plates, too?" We nodded, "How much did you pay for them?"

"Two dollars also," Naocy and I said almost simultaneously. It was a lie-we had paid half that amount. But it was as if we could somehow cheer this poor woman whose life's possessions were very oearly being given away to her neighbors, just by lying about the price of a one-dollar

"That was a very good buy, too,"

she said, and turned away to the wall she had been leaning against earlier.

We dido't stay at the auction much longer. We were there long enough to see the woman fall onto the floor and hear a half-dozen people say: "I knew that would happen. She never should have been allowed to come here." It took a while before anyone helped her up and propped her in a chair. We didn't stay much after that.

We later learned that the woman whose auction we had attended was divorcing her husband, that she had cleaned out the house the two had shared in Brookfield and was cashing in on assets which might oot have been entirely her own. I also found out that the woman taking notes and bidding on many items was acting as an agent for the husband, buying part of his possessions back. That should have made a difference, I suppose, but it didn't.

We gave the chafing dish away to frieods who had admired it, but we made them promise they would keep it, use it and never have it appraised. They were embarrassed by the gift but agreed to the promises. We explained why we couldn't keep it ourselves. The pewter pieces are tucked somewhere at home, but I'm not sure where. We'll probably end up giving them away, too, and generosity will have nothing to do with the gesture.

We found out that occasionally, if all the elements fall together, you can find one of those country auctioos where the bidding is low and the buys are fantastic. Those auctions are still held sometimes in Vermoot, But it's a matter of whether you can handle them. They can be pretty rough.

agency," a spokeswomao for Travel-Savers says. 'Each time a member books a stay at a hotel anywhere in the world through the club office, the member shares the club's commission. The amount of money refunded to the member is determined by what is spent on hotel accommodations."

As an example, if the total cost of a member's hotel stays for a year is $250, the refund to the member is $1S. Higher outlays result to bigger refunds: A total expenditure of $1,000 carns a refund of $7S. In addition to the refunds on hotel stays, the club offers its members discounts on car rentals, participation in charter flights, free golf at certain resorts and a newsletter. The membeship fee is $10 a year. Details from TravelSavers, 140 County Road, Tenafly, N.J. 07670 (tel: 201-569-1150).

BRITISH GRAPE HARVEST

Because the past summer was the driest and sunniest in more than 250 years in Britain, the British grape harvest and British wine are proving to be exceptionally good this fall. Vineyards in Britain? Indeed. Since 1951, when Sir Guy Salisbury Jones planted an acre of grapevines on a slope in Hambledon, Hampshire, the cultivation of grapes has grown to more than 100 commercial vineyards covering more than 400 acres, according to the American Automobile Association. The association suggests that travelers interested in touring British vineyards consider the Suffolk Vineyards in East Anglia, the Beaulieu Abbey Estate in Hampshire, the Merrydown Wine Company in Horam, Sussex, Pilton Manor near the Mendip Hills in Somerset and the vineyards on the Isle of Wight. Further information may be obtained by writing the secretary of the English Vineyards Association, Cricks Green, Felsted, Essex England.

RAVENNA PLAN

The Tourist Board of Ravenoa, Italy. is offering a free overnight stay to tourists this fall. Under the program, individuals and couples can visit the city any weekend and stay overnight with a local family or in an apartment without charge. The intention of the program, which has been offered in past years, is to acquaint the traveler with the Adriatic Coast and induce him and his family to return the following summer. Arrangements can be made by writing to Aziendo Autonoma di Soggiorno e Turismo, Via San Vitale 2, 48100 Ravenna, Italy.

BUDGET TRAVEL

The latest edition of "America on $8 a Night" by Ellen and Robert Christopher contains a fold-out map of the United States that gives the locations of budget-class motels and the tollfree (800) numbers of 13 low-priced motel chains. The compilation is the first of its kind, according to the authors, who have been publishing their guide to inexpensive accommodations and restaurants for the past four years. The book can be obtained for $3.95 plus 45 cents for postage and handling from the Christophers, Box 47, Milford, Conn. 06460.

PHILADELPHIA TOUR

Penn's Landing, a new waterfront development along the Delaware River, has been added to Philadelphia's do-it-yourself tour called Penn-Ways, which covers sites, institutions and memorabilia relating to William Penn, Devised by the Philadelphia Convention and Visitors Bureau, the Philadelph:a Historical Commission and the City Representative's Office, the tour meanders through the center of town, the Germantown section and along the Liberty Trail, taking in more than two dozen buildings and sites. Penn's Landing marks the spot where the ship Welcome landed with Penn and his first group of seitlers. Free copies of the tour are available from the Convention and Visitors Bureau, 1525 John F. are yoked together in pairs with a rider balanced on a skid between them as they barrel down a course as long as a football field at speeds up to 25 miles an hour. Madura is an hour's ferry and car ride from Surabaya, which is 400 miles, or an hour by jet, from Jakarta.

NANNY SERVICE

The Carribbean island of Jamaica runs a nanny service for vacationing pareots who want a holiday from their children. The young women who serve as naonies are given instruction in child care, first-aid, swimming and lifesaviog at a school run by the Jamaica Tourist Board, which supervises the service. They are encouraged to read to their charges and to tell them about Jamaica. A nanny's regular hours are from 9 A.M. to 7 P.M. The cost to parents for a day is $8 for two children. Shorter day service and evening sitting are paid for by the hour. Each naony may care for two children between the ages of six months and 10 years. The service is avzilable in Montego Bay, Runaway Bay and Ocho Rios. Interested travelers should make application to the

WALKS IN THE PARK

The Friends of Inwood Hill Park at the northern end of Manhattan have switched their focus from the Bicentennial to nature as a theme for monthly walks in the park. This fall and winter the emphasis will be on nonflowering plants, butterflies, snow flowers and snow birds, according to Mrs. David Vance, public relations chairman. The walks begin at 1 P.M. on the last Sunday of each month and the group assembles at the flagpole near the Isham Street entrance to the park. Today's walk will be led by Frances Stone, whose topic will be "The Last Blooms of August" On Nov. 28 William Greiner will lead the group and the topic will be "Preparations for the Long Wioter Sleep." A $1 donation is requested of persons joining the group for the first time. Details from Mrs. Vance, c/o Friends of Inwood Hill Park, 374 Wadsworth Avenue, New York 10040 (tel: 212-WA 8-9149).

HERE AND THERE

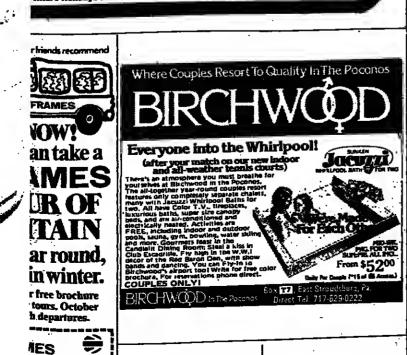

More than 2,000 people are expected to take part in the 14th annual S0-mile John F. Kennedy hike and run through Washington County in Maryland on Nov. 20. The course follows the Appalachian Trail for 13 miles and the C & O Canal towpath for 26 miles.

"Where should I go next time? That's been my first thought at the end of every tour Al and I have ever taken. But the I6-day Orient Enchantment Tour on Philippine Airlines was different. It only cost about $1200°, and we were treated like the most important people in the Orient.

There are so many things I'd like to go back and see again. The bargain shopping in Manila was fantastic. And what food! We went to the special Gala Mabuhay dinner in Manila with the second of the s

Al's waistline hasn't forgotten it either: I loved the Tiger Balm Garden in Singapore, and the temples in Bangkok and Hong Kong. Al kept saying, 'Hazel, I never thought we'd see anything as beautiful as this.' And believe me, Al's no romantic.

The only thing I'm going to do different next time is stay for 21 days, so we'll also get to spend some time in Japan and Taiwan.

This all means that Al and I can't wait to take the Orient Enchantment Tour again. It also means that anybody who takes a tour can judge how good it is.

aurgent reasons call Delta now fo winter reservations to Florida.

Beat the crowds to the seats you want. Delta has seats for more than 2,600 people a day this winter on nonstops from New York to Miami, Ft. Lauderdale and Tampa/St. Pete. But to be sure you get on the flight you want, make your reservations early.

Beat the crowds to the free champagne. We're serving free champagne to adults in Tourist on all Delta flights to Florida, all winter long. It's our way of saying thank you for flying Delta Air Lines.

Beat the crowds to the Wide-Ride L-1011 TriStars. We've got five of these $21 million superjets going for you to Florid every day. And all 256 seats, nose to tail, are two-by-two. The is the most popular jet in our Wide-Ride fleet, so it's a good idea to book early.

Beat the crowds to the bargain nights. Every night is bargain night on Delta. You save 20% off the regular Day Tourist fare on a Delta nonstop Night Coach. They leave around 9:00pm from all three airports for Miami/Ft.Lauderdale. You can catch a Delta nonstop Night Coach to Tampa/St.Pete, too.

If you'd rather take a daytime flight, you can save 15% on round-trips to Florida, effective Dec.19, with Delta Freedom Fares. There are advance purchase and reservation requirements, restrictions on travel duration and times, but they're worth it. Check for details. No other airline beats Delta's money-saving fares.
